COLLEGE OR GRAMMAR SCHOOL?

The conduct of students in the halls has provided a popular topic for discussion both in print and in private conversation. It has been suggested that the manners exhibited by certain students would indicate that they were reared in a mule barn. We do not draw quite as drastic conclusions, but we do think that we have a number of aspiring intellectuals, not necessarily freshmen, who cannot realize the difference between grammar school and college. The chief amusement of these young citizens of this democracy is to insult constituted authority in as many ways as possible. We have even heard them give pert little taps on classroom doors for the sole purpose of annoying the instructors and disturbing the classes. Occasionally some lusty voiced young buck expresses his individuality by sending a Comanche yell reverberating through the corridors. His feminine counterpart employs her time in the more defined pleasure of congregating with her friends before classroom doors and making funny faces at her friends confined within. It is noticeable, however, that she always assumes a position where the instructor cannot get the benefit of the comedy. If certain students' conception of being collegiate is based on such grammar schoolish ideas, each instructor should have the privilege of dealing with them as he would with children.

INTRAMURAL ATHLETICS

Splendid response to invitations from the intramural football coaches exhibited a rivalry between the three schools: Liberal Arts, Agriculture, and Engineering. One coach reports to us that he expects to win. And, we are of the opinion that the others expect they'll win, also. Keen competition can be expected to follow. The Engineers, champions of last year, appear determined to hold their record. But the two other schools are probably equally as determined that they shall not have it again. A first thought might not indicate that there is any good to be derived by creating rivalry between the schools. A second thought gives a different impression, however.

The spirit which intramural athletics foster can be transferred to "Tech Spirit" when occasions arise involving the entire college.

INDIFFERENCE

The highest degree of indifference was expressed by non-attendance at a certain class meeting the other night when only a few students were present. (The number who attended was so small that we hate to mention it.)

Members of the class can not hide behind the excuse that the meeting was not generally known.

The situation reminds us of that which a certain class at S. M. U. is facing this year. An editorial in "The Semi-Weekly Campus", S. M. U. newspaper, stated that the members of such a class deserved to be ruled badly.

And, with this editor's idea in mind, we ask students of Tech if they have any right to kick at ANY policy which their class may adopt if they are indifferent toward class meetings.

SOME BIG THINGS ABOUT A BIG COLLEGE

Had you ever thought what a job it was to build a college, a big college of high standards, both as an institution of learning, and on the part of its students in their relationships with one another on the campus? Of course, someone must have a vision first, and be willing to abide by it even in the face of difficulties and discouragements. Then a group of faculty members must be collected who will devote themselves loyally to building the institution. Of course, the students come at first out of curiosity, some because they think it will be easier, and fewer restrictions will be placed on them. Then comes the process of "culling." This is not as hard as it is tedious. When the right sort of atmosphere is built up around the institution, those undesirable feel that they are left out, and either reform their mode of thinking, or seek happier climes.

Needless to say, this has been somewhat the history of Texas Technological College. Dr. P. W. Horn, and the board of directors, conceived the kind of institution which they felt would be well to build in this section of the state. Difficulties, of course, arose, but our president has been unmoved in his purpose, as it were, and has gone ahead with his plans, almost unceasingly; and the result? Where can be found another institution of less than four year's existence with nearly a hundred and fifty faculty members of the highest type, including doctors and masters, many nationally known, and some internationally known. What other institution can boast of passing the 2000 mark in enrollment within the first four years? What other institution has been admitted to the Southern Association of Colleges as a first class senior college when only three years old? What other institution has graduated over one hundred fifty students within the first three years.

And as to the atmosphere on Tech campus: One realizes when on the campus that he is in the midst of young life, seeking to solve the great mysteries, the social order, and other great problems. Students are beginning to find that they are marked characters when they violate certain social standards. Mr. Roy McCollough has been very instrumental in helping our student leaders to find themselves with reference to college life, and his influence in this capacity will ever be alive on our campus. Who knows how many men and women of the world of tomorrow will say I am this, or I am that, because I have known Mac?

Every student, every alumnus, every patron, yes, every friend has a right to be proud of this great institution of learning which has so quickly sprung up here on the South Plains, and is meaning so much to the life of West Texas, and Texas as a whole, even this early in its history. Already, this institution has proven that, though young, it is one of the greatest factors in Texas, educational system. We must not think, however, that of school of which we are so justly proud, has been built out of vision which had no traditions as a basis. It must be remembered that the faculty members brought with them the finest there was in the largest universities throughout the nation; that students coming from other schools brought with them

Ladies and Gentlemen:

The winter term is no more than well started than the elements begin to rage and the sand begins to blow (or to be blown, of our thought is to be correctly expressed, and our English language maintained in its purity). You've heard of the Englishman, who, on noticing that the London fog was thicker than usual, found that he was wading the Thames river? If it were not for the mile-a-minute velocity of these balmy western zephyrs, we might be induced to believe that we have had been wandering around in a sand pit. Enough for sand. Will stake our reputation on the prophecy that there'll be more later. If not, we're willing to lose our reputation in the better interests of this sand-collared portion of humanity. Before we depart from our discussion of the elements, we would like to offer the prize of never-ending fame and a free subscription to "The Toreador" to the student devising a practical invention for sifting the wind. A wonderful opportunity for a technological training to demonstrate its usefulness.

The president of our institution has helped to popularize a good expression—"Corridor Beauties." Now don't become excited and start going to classes or anything else unpremeditated; we are not going to deliver a long homily against the quaint habit of tripping each other in the halls. Personally we don't rush down the halls as if the thought a check from home were waiting to greet us at the end. We will make this forecast: If the banister on the second floor ever does give way, it will carry a booby portion of Tech beauty and manhood along with it. Moral: Don't waste time in the halls; or, if you must, don't sit on the banister; or, if you must, try to keep one hand to the hand of some friend nearby. But we are quite pedantic. The last suggestion is already in vogue.

We cut an eight o'clock class the other day. It was a deliberate, sinful cut. We were not "temporarily insane." We were not under the influence of any stimulant. We were guilty of first degree cutting. But we did want the experience of staying in bed for a few more minutes. That is, part of us did, in fact, most of us did. We were somewhat divided on the question. And you know that a house divided against itself cannot stand; so we stayed in bed. And we had to cut breakfast in order to keep from cutting a nine o'clock class that followed.

We wonder what might have happened if we had been good and gone to the eight o'clock class. We might have learned something that would have been of great importance to us in our future struggle to make ends meet and the children separated. We often wander far afield and sometimes hop a little bit in the air of the imagination. What might have been? We sincerely wish it had. Fancy leads us to wonder what might have happened if we had gone to bed instead of staying up to write all this foolishness, but bitter experience the traditions of those institutions; that even freshmen entering college for the first time brought with them the traditions of western life from the best of homes. All these have entered into the melting pot to make for us the school that we have.

teaches us that it would only have meant that we would have been short of copy when we go to press.

"What does sleep mean to a man, anyway?" we ask you. The other day a dry goods salesman, in trying to sell us some blankets for the winter, told us that he spent half of our life in the bed. "So why not buy some blankets?" he said. Whereupon we thought either how ignorant of college life he is, or how big a misrepresentor he could be called by a man who cussed. Cause the college people we know sleep about all the way from five to eight hours. "Is that half of twenty-four?" we ask you.

You would think the individual queer indeed who rode a stick horse to Tech. Yet, college people are recorded as convention breakers. And, some of the conventions which they break brand them as sillier than a whole cavalry mounted on wooden steeds.

When better students enroll, Tech will enroll them. Yet we think she has a few who ought to be kicked out.

Most of us are not like the humorist whom a certain writer had in mind the other day when he said in substance: "The humorist cannot produce on an empty stomach. But give him a stomach full of beef-steak and he can turn it into laughter." The orator is inclined to believe the statement is true.

But for some of your best humor; for a real laugh; take a look at the letters on the post office window. There's the card from the boy back home who writes to his old girl out here. And she refuses to call for the postal card. So the boy back home, never thinking that she could give him up, just reflects on the dependability of one Uncle Sam. He's rather an abstract character in his mind anyhow.

A recent news story stated that the circulation in the library was on the increase. The orator predicts that some day it's going to get so crowded that we can't move around in there at all. We'll be unable to flirt from one study table to another.

While our copy-bums are on the library, let us tell you this one. The other day a girl came into the abode of shelved knowledge and said she wanted a book of Elizabethan drama which was written during the Victorian period.

Now those of us who don't know the different periods (dashes) of literature, will be unable to appreciate the little breach. But ask your English professor. He knows and will be glad to tell you.

Student Opinion

THE SHORT COURSE
Tech, an institution devoted to the instruction of resident students, also has equipment and forces on its campus which can be used for other types of service.

One of these types of service is a farmer's short course to be offered on the 29 and 30 of January. The short course is for both men and women. A two day program full of interest to everyone has been arranged. Assistance is also given by the agricultural experiment station in this section and members of the state experiment station staff—G. B.

CLASS LOYALTY
If any organization, and a college class in particular, is to accomplish anything, each member must be willing to carry his portion of the burdens of the work. Of course every member of the class cannot be an officer, nor can he serve on a committee, but there is one thing that every member can do, and that is to attend the class meetings. The class meetings in Texas Tech have shown a low per cent attendance this year. It is next to impossible to accomplish anything at a class meeting when there are only a few present. The few who attend the meetings are reluctant to do anything because it does not, so far as figures go, represent the will of the majority. Do your duty as a college citizen and as a member of the class to which you belong, and attend the class meetings, so that whatever your class does may be one hundred per cent representative of the class, and not the work of just a few.

Exchanges

Peter Mueller of Nittel, Germany, nephew of Archbishop Hurth, former president of the University, came to America three months ago, desiring an American education and is now attending the preparatory school at St. Edward's—Saint Edward's Echo.

Former students of the University of Texas are petitioning the Texas Legislature, now in session, to provide for the construction of a dormitory for men to replace the famous "B Hall." Fraternity members and pledges would be barred from the proposed dormitory.—Daily Texan.

The name "Llano Estacado," or staked plains, applied to the plains of West Texas, comes from the story that the Spanish explorer, Coronado, staked his course across the plains to enable him to retrace his steps.—P. S. News.—College Star.

Students under 18 years of age at the University of Omaha will be arrested if they are found on the streets of the city after 8 p. m., in accordance with the resolution of the W. C. T. U. of that city.—Targum.

Of the 25,000 persons named in "Who's Who" approximately 14,000 or more than half are college graduates. About 3,000 attended college but did not graduate. Nearly 3,000 completed their high school training but did not go on to college. Two thousand acquired only grammar school education, while about the same number did not reveal the extent of their education. Of the entire number only 388 professed to have attended no other school than the University of Hard Knocks.—Targum.

What Tech Offers Told By Divisions

(Editor's Note: This is one of a series of articles dealing with the various departments of instruction at Tech. Each department head is being asked to submit an article giving the relation of the subjects taught to life. The series of articles is designed to give a better insight into the whole college.)

HISTORY, PHILOSOPHY, AND SOCIOLOGY

The spirit that animates these departments is suggested by the following quotation from James Harvey Robinson: "Of all human ambitions an open mind eagerly expectant of new discoveries and ready to remold convictions in the light of added knowledge and discarded ignorances and misapprehensions, is the noblest, the rarest and the most difficult to achieve." We have no axe to grind, nothing to "over" on anybody. Ours is the love of freedom and fair play.

History our first aim is to cover the whole ground in outline, instead of going off on a by-path we learn how to keep to the road. This involves the principle of historical continuity. It is not in what field one may be interested, it is convenient to have some general knowledge of history—some pegs on which to hang our thoughts. We can understand the present only by finding its roots in the past. We ascend the hills, and take a broad view. The ultimate aim of history as a factor in liberal education is to set free the mind from the trammels of the past.

Philosophy is an old study, and as held its place on down through the centuries. It is only the most prosaic minds that ask no questions as to the deeper meanings of the universe and human life. Philosophy deals with problems as to the ultimate nature of reality and as to what constitute our highest values. It is the profoundest subject in the curriculum. Only those who are willing to undertake reflective thinking are likely to be interested.

We all know how thoroughly the material world has been changed by the triumphs of what has been known as natural science. No one can be sure just what transformations will take place when the scientific spirit is genuinely applied to the social world. The work is going on almost feverishly. The field is being rapidly mapped out for the several social sciences, and already a large body of knowledge has been accumulated. Methods and techniques are being perfected. Sociology is only one of the social sciences, and one of the most recent; but at the same time it is possibly the most comprehensive. Only gradually are people coming to see the importance of understanding the society of which they are a part. The effort is made by many to conquer little segments of it, but sociology attempts to view society as a whole. When we speak of a "technological" college we are accustomed to think exclusively of technology in connection with the material conquest of nature; but the time is fast approaching when a well-worked-out technology in the field of government, education, and all phases of social life will be at the service of society. It is evident that this idea has not yet taken hold very vigorously in our own school, but the social sciences are already making their distinct contribution and doubtless will in time receive due recognition.

JOHN C. GRANBERY.

El Toro

"Inspiration is the mother of all things good." . . . "Inspiration is the soul of art." . . . And other inspirational quotations too numerous to sanction.

The experiment would be interesting to the world if some materialistic person would devote some of the more useless of his years to the task of collecting everything that has been said about inspiration. It would be a smaller task, we think, to collect the things which have been said because of inspiration. For publication, we should like to go on record admitting the existence of inspiration; but we should incriminate ourselves, probably, if we spoke further.

To begin with, we shall allow that inspiration (that abstract something) has been cheapened, since it has been placed before the public in a setting which offends the sense of the aesthete. One reviews inspirational magazines marked "Sample Copy." Inspirational literature may be had for the taking in depot waiting rooms, public reading rooms, bank lobbies, etc. Certain societies deal it out by the ream. Even the budding poet's first poem is labeled "Inspiration." "The Goal" or "Fame." Insurance companies play emotionally upon the word; and play-writing schools solemnly declare that "you may be one of the chosen few who have IT."

Personally, we believe that Horatio Alger should bear a large portion of the responsibility for starting the inspirational racket in the United States. Back in the days when we first read "Sink or Swim" we had not an inkling as to the proportions to which the modern world has risen. Now, inspirational ideas fairly pour down upon us. Then came the deluge; and indeed it seems that we must sink or swim.

People found out a long time ago that they should not be lulled to sleep by the fact that inspiration has come to be made up of complacent advice mixed with a few interpolations of ego on the part of the person making the inspirational talk. During commencement time all speakers are expected to deliver a perfect tempest of inspirational addresses. Oratory soars and is refueled in the air. The record of the Question Mark dwindles to naught in comparison.

But the question mark which hangs before us is how to suppress the conventional yawn which makes its never-failing appearance upon the mere mention of anything of inspirational character. Robustly speaking, we should like to see our inspiration place upon a properly appointed pedestal. We want soft lights and real music. We want color and harmony and conviction. We'd like to believe in what we see and hear. We should like to be so placed that we may look ABOUT but not ABOVE the things we have placed upon our pedestal.

(Seventeen asterisks to denote passage of the while the yawns are subsiding).

When the left wing crumpled the literary aviator adopted as his slogan: "Back to Nature;" or, "Dust to Dust." Well, we believe that it is just as great a thing to have a place to come down to as it is to have a place to look up to. This is not a philosophical column, but happy is the man who is able to look under and over.

and the man shut up, and then shut up his typewriter; and when he went away, he was heard muttering, "this is the end."

COVER DESIGNS SENT TO LA VENTANA

FRESHMEN MEET TOMORROW

James Whiteside, freshman president, desires the presence of all members of that class at a meeting in the gymnasium Thursday, January 24, at 7:30 o'clock. It is necessary that all freshmen be present, as a sponsor is to be elected to take Miss Parker's place. There is also, other important business to be attended to.

Jack Maddox Student Prexy, is back in school after a brief illness.

Frosh Outs With Secret Of Getting Money From Home

Where is the college student who does not write home, and who is he that does not add a plea for more money? Getting money from the folks is an art that few freshmen know. It takes several months of experience before anyone can become proficient.

There are many methods of obtaining money from home. The most popular one with students on a budget plan is to put all extra items, such as cream puffs, on the budget as soap. A student can always get by on five to ten dollars worth of soap a month with an occasional tube of shaving cream or tooth paste. It is always surprising to parents how students catch cold away from home as the monthly allowance of handkerchiefs is always large and the price is high.

The students whose parents have a keen sense of humor should all relate the latest joke along with several witty remarks before he gets to the point. When the point is reached it should be stated briefly by a volley of humorous incidents.

If father and mother are greatly concerned about son's health, he should always have several extra dollars with which to purchase medicine, while the studious student always needs money for reference books.

"Don't forget to write home these long winter evenings because the folks may have gotten some more money since you wrote last."

Ruth Officer, Wilburn's girl, is a former La Ventana beauty. While she still has the necessary essentials for a college beauty, we doubt if she makes the grade this year. Edliemore is not likely to submit her picture, being editor of the book.

Wallace Varley is leaving school to work in the post office at Collinsville, Texas. His mother, the postmistress there, is ill and Wallace has to attend to the business of the office. He expects to be back in a term or two.

Dayle Wallace, graduate English student who works in the Registrar's office, is the sort of college student who, when he wishes for someone to stop laughing, says: "Kindly desist from such unseemingly raucous cacklings within the confines of this official domicile of the registrar."

Hodges decided it was time to show all of his home town friends what a forward he was. As a result he was high point man with 13 points. At the half A. C. C. was leading 12 to 11.

Referee—Pittman (Simmons)
ABILENE, Jan. 22—Texas Tech did this ninth inning rush act with much gusto tonight, but a ten point lead accumulated by the Abilene Christians stood off to win the game by the not too comfortable margin of 33-22.

With half of the last round gone, A. C. C. led by a score of 31 to 21. Vic Payne's boys did most of the remaining work, Wortham, a substitute guard slipping in a single field goal while all of the Matadors on the floor turned a hand to put over twelve points. A long looping goal by Tadlock in the last second, however, fell short of bringing about a tie.

Purvis and Pippen, A. C. C.'s freshmen from Cisco, did the damage for the Wildcats. Together they accounted for 27 points. Purvis' five field goals and same number of free tosses gave him scoring honors. Not particularly rough, but hard fought, the contest produced a large number of personals. Purvis, Black and Powell of the Wildcats being ousted, and Vinzant for Tech meeting the air.

Dalton and Vinzant were outstanding for the Matadors.

Fisher renewed old knee injuries before the game was over, and had to be helped from the floor.

answer to the question: "It's cold out there ain't it?" he replied: "No. You know I seen you when you knocked on the door," he continued addressing the visitor.

"He's got a car he can't start," the little old man put in.

"Well, why didn't you go help him start it?" Jack replied.

"I thought you'd be back in a little bit," Jingoos said, "and you know you're so good at startin' cars," he continued with a good natured chuckle.

Then he told a story of helping someone start a car who spent about ten minutes trying to put the crank in the thing. "He got so mad he said he was going to get something and rim that crank-hole out," the little old man said near the end of the story. "I told him, by Jingoos, he couldn't start the thing a-tall if he did," the man who was drawing seventy-five dollars per month said with his characteristic chuckle.

"Come on. Let's start that car," Jack said after a little.

"Well, it wouldn't be so bad if he didn't have to have the car to come to work in at eight in the morning," the visitor said.

"It's nearly twelve now and all the garages and filling stations are closed. I don't think a bit of use trying the car," he continued as Jack led way out the door.

DEAN SPEAKS AT CLARENDON
"Enduring Community Building" was the subject of an address by Dean Gordon at the annual banquet of the Clarendon Chamber of Commerce in Clarendon last week. Dr. Gordon was the principal speaker of the occasion.

VISIT HERE
Prof. Shepherdson, head of A. and M. Department of Dairy Husbandry and A. B. Connor, director of Texas Experiment Station, were campus visitors recently. Both were returning to College Station from a meeting of the Texas Jersey Cattle club at Amarillo.

THANK YOU ST. EDWARDS
The last issue of the SAINT EDWARDS ECHO, St. Edwards university newspaper, recognizes exchanges from 29 different schools.

In commenting on these exchanges the ECHO has this to say: "It can be readily seen that it would be practically impossible in this limited space to comment on all of these exchanges. For this reason only the outstanding are mentioned.

The outstanding among the college publications, considering size, make-up, news and, above all, newspaper style, is the Tulane Hulla-buloo, published by Tulane university at New Orleans, followed by the Texas Tech Toreador. Among the smaller publications on the St. Edwards' exchange list, the Houstonian, published by Sam Houston State Teachers college, is probably the best."

Other People Will Pay Student Fees

J. H. Clett and Roscoe Wilson, prominent Lubbock citizens, have offered to pay the registration expenses of the twenty-five hundredth and the three thousandth Tech student, respectively.

Freshman Council Asks Y Admittance

At a meeting last week by a unanimous vote the Freshman Boys' Council decided to petition the Y. M. C. A. to admit the Council to the Association as a group, thereby changing the organization into a Y. M. C. A. Council. Hal Lary, Y. M. C. A. president, and Warren Huff were present at the meeting, and they agreed to put the petition before the Y. M. C. A. membership and try to obtain favorable action within the near future.

At this meeting the chairman of the initiation committee, Norman, announced that plans had been completed for the first initiation ever to be held by the council, which will take place this week.

Home Ec Seniors Present Pantomime

A courtesy program was the feature of the Home Economics club meeting last Friday night. Seniors in the School of Home Economics had charge of the program, which was presented in the form of a pantomime in three scenes. Anna Belle Collins made introductory speeches at the beginning of each act, and at the beginning of play.

A representative of the Ag club was present at this meeting, and extended an invitation to the members of the club to attend a party to be given by the Ag club in the dairy barn next Friday night. This party will be in the form of an old settlers reunion.

Very little business was conducted at this Home Ec club meeting, aside from two members of the club, Jane Ruth Shepard and Juanita Harwell, being admitted to the council of the organization. Plans for a party were also discussed, but nothing was decided definitely.

Petition Made To Pave College Ave.

A petition to the state legislature asking that body to appropriate money to pave College Avenue has been made by the City Commissioners.

Since College Avenue is a state road, appropriations for paving must come from the legislature. Consideration will be given the matter when the legislature meets in special session to consider appropriations and other bills.
