

Around And About The Sports Circuit

By Tom Bousley

THERE HAVE been rumors floating up and down the Front way of America indicating that Big Spring may join with Loraine in entering a team in the last half of the Permian Basin league chase.

THE SIX teams in the Permian Basin league are Texon, Wink, Ozona, Iraan, McCamey and Crane. It seems doubtful that any of them will agree on Loraine because of the distance teams would have to travel.

THE ALL-STAR sports fan will reach its zenith this year. Four nationally recognized baseball and football games are scheduled during July and August, with two to be held in Dallas, Centennial hot-spot.

ASCOT, Eng., June 15 (UP)—Short of much of its century or more of royal tradition, the four-day Royal Ascot race meet opens here June 15.

It is tradition that the reigning king should drive in state to his own track, situated in Ascot Park, and part of the Windsor Castle estate, on at least two days of the meet.

LEE DORN GIVES UP FIVE HITS

By HANK HART

LORAIN, June 14—The Big Spring Oilers touched Lee Dorn for only five hits here Sunday afternoon but hitting the pinchers gave them a 2-1 verdict over the Loraine Independents and a season's record of three games won in four starts against the Mitchell county aggregation.

The veteran Pap Payne gave up eight hits through the nine innings he tolled, but had his hopper slung the corners of the plate at crucial moments and always pulled through. He was given the decision when Miller Harris scored twice.

Knitted Square For Bedspread

By RUTH ORR
Pattern No. 308

Knitting has a delightfully soothing effect and for the lazy summer days, here's a simple knitted motif for a bedspread. It's small, so that it can be tucked in your knitting bag and carried off to the bench or to your neighbor's porch.

The pattern is not knitted as a whole but made in quarter sections, something over 3 1/2 inches, so that each whole square is 7 3/4 inches across. The pattern envelope contains complete, easy-to-understand illustrated directions, with diagrams to aid you; also what needles and what material and how much you will need.

To obtain this pattern, send for No. 308 and enclose 10 cents in stamps or coin (coin preferred), to cover service and postage. Address Big Spring Herald, Needlework Dept., P. O. Box 200, Station D, New York, N. Y.

Gypsy Weather

Chapter 23 HIDE TO THE NORTH

Dirk had got home early, and dressed with care—black cutaway, white spats, white gloves and gardenia. Could Rupert really mean to go to Elinor's wedding? It so they. Hope and Rupert would go together, and he himself might hurry on alone.

He looked in Rupert's room, little surprised to find that he had gone out again. He knocked on Hope's door and she opened it, still in negligee.

"Don't wait for Rupert," he said. "Get a dress on, and come with me."

She said she was not going. "But you've got to!" Dirk answered. "One of you must."

At Adelaide's suggestion, he had bought two wedding presents that day—a silver dish and a set of salad forks—one for himself, one for Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Joris. He felt, however, inadequate to represent the entire family in the matter of attendance.

He shot out his wrist, looked at his watch.

"There's time if you'll hurry. It will be the dickens to explain if you both stay away. Please, Hope. You may ask something of me some day."

He doubted this, but she turned from the door, and he knew that she would go.

Ten minutes later she came out, dressed. Timothy told them as they left that Mister Rupert had driven up to the camp.

"For a few days' hunting, sir. The grouse should be good now."

Dirk explained to Hope that the Joris came to Big Moose.

"Near Lake Placid. He goes every fall. He'll be back by Monday."

At the church he seated Hope with Adelaide Joris, and then he stood beside Isabel while the old bishop united Elinor to Seymour Gage. The world was hushed and gray as they left the church and later, when birds and groom departed for their train, snowflakes were flying with the rise.

Late Tuesday night Connolly telephoned Dirk inquiring how he might get in touch with Rupert. Dirk, who had expected Rupert home on Monday directed him to phone the camp. Yes, said Connolly, he knew where Rupert was supposed to be; he had met him Thursday in the act of leaving for Big Moose. But he had been calling the camp most of the day without receiving an answer.

Dirk replied that he would drive up to Big Moose in the morning and discover what was wrong.

He was distinctly uneasy. The snowflakes at Elinor's wedding had been the edges of a storm that had blanketed the Lake Placid country in white, calling out skis and toboggans and jolly retrogravures in the Sunday press. He and Hope had looked at the pictures together, had longed to round glorious Shady Curve on the Olympic bob-sled run.

Rupert may have been hunting when the storm came, hunting without a guide. Or he might be drinking alone in the cabin, cut off from food supplies and likely enough without a properly tended fire.

Dirk mentioned none of these apprehensions to Hope. When he announced to her that he would be running up to Big Moose, she answered, "May I go along?"

"If you can get up at five," he said. "And if you can stand hardship. It's pretty cold up there."

He had no objection to her going, and he had no particular fear about leaving her behind. Her secrets, he had begun to believe, were innocent enough. She loved the blond cowboy—any fool could see that. She had gone with him, no doubt, from rodeo to circus, in the company of this Torrobin, who was their mutual friend, or the relative of one of them.

She had been tired of that life, and glad to escape from it. But she had not escaped from her interest in the cowboy or from her anxiety regarding him; and she did not wish Rupert to know of her connection with that life, or with the boy.

"She thinks, I'd tell Rupert," thought Dirk. "She thinks perhaps I've already told him what I know, so she doesn't intend that I shall know more."

But he did not discharge the men at the gate, and he did not order Martin to relax his vigil.

"Through November," he told himself.

Dirk saw that Hope was bundled in her new raccoon coat next morning, tucked the robes well about her. The day was dawning crisp and clear, with promise of an April-blue sky. Traces of the storm increased as they drove north, and that afternoon when they reached Big Moose they found a world buried in snow.

Dirk left the car at the railway station, and telephoned to Sandy, a native guide, to meet them with his sleigh. Sandy's sleigh took them to the Joris camp, a log-cabin of three rooms, a boat-house and garage, all roofed and piled with drifts. The lake was frozen, the color of pewter, and gray skies brooded over all, heavy with more snow.

There was no trace of Rupert. The bunks had not been slept in, and the ashes on the hearth, the empty bottles about the kitchen, might have been relics of former visits. Sandy told them at once that he had not seen him.

"Looks like he would have let me know, seeing I always look after you folks."

Dirk and Sandy organized a posse that afternoon, and they searched for Rupert through all the frozen woods. Hope went too, though Dirk urged her to remain at the cabin with Sandy's big birch-fire.

Toward evening Sandy asked that they both return to the camp. "You're tuckered out, driving all day. We can find him without you." And the guides went on searching with torches and lanterns, while Dirk took Hope back to the cabin and the fire.

It was snowing again now, blowing in little whisps against the pane. Now and then a windy breath came down the black maw of the chimney, scattering gray feathers of birch-ash out into the room, and driving the flame of the candle side-ways. They had forgotten to buy kerosene, and had had to empty the lamps into the stove to cook their steak. Somewhere Dirk had dug up the candle. They washed the dishes, too, in front of the fire, for it was bright in the kitchen, now that the kerosene was all gone. It was bitter cold in the bedroom too, and even here in the big living-room, except close to the fire, while the little bathroom was like an ice-box.

But Hope was not complaining. Together they sat in the wide-armed hickory chairs, watching the fire, and waiting.

Dirk said, "I wish you'd lie down, and rest."

She shook her head. Her eyes looked hard and brooding. He had suspected for some time that she had begun to care for Rupert, not as she cared for that other man, perhaps, but as a friend, a benefactor whom she desired to please. He tried to reassure her. Rupert might have gone elsewhere, he said.

"Perhaps," she answered. "Whenever he is, I blame myself. I might have stopped him . . . for a while, anyhow. And then he might have forgotten."

She seemed to be talking to the fire, or thinking aloud.

Dirk said quietly, not to intrude himself, merely to steer her thoughts into the light.

"How could you have stopped him?"

"By holding him back. That last day. By loving him back. Only it wasn't love. He was thinking of her . . . of Elinor. It was because she was getting married. It wasn't because he wanted me. It was almost like . . . revenge. Like avenging himself on her. I couldn't bear . . . but now . . ."

She paused. Dirk in his astonishment was silent. It was perhaps the wisest answer, for she spoke again.

"He loved her. He still loves her. I knew it the night of her dinner, when I saw them together."

So that was why she had been so quiet that night. She looked at him now, her brooding eyes full of the firelight. "Before that," she said, "I wanted him to love me."

Disaster Of Repeal Cited

WCTU President Tells Of Toll Taken; Liquor Is Blamed

TULSA, Okla., June 15. (UP)—Mrs. Ida B. Wise Smith, national president of the W. C. T. U., pointed to the "disaster of repeal" as basis of the Women's Christian Temperance Union's war against liquor.

Three years have cost, Mrs. Smith said in a talk, 10,000 lives, injuries to 300,000 and $600,000 in damage to property and health. Drunkenness, she told delegates to the sixty-second convention of the W. C. T. U. had caused the great loss.

She added: "Last year the people of the United States contributed more than $2,000,000,000 to the liquor makers and dispensers. In 1936 the bill will grow to three billion.

"Motor traffic deaths have increased more than 25 per cent in the past two years.

"Traffic in intoxicants has drawn from the American people no less than $7,000,000,000 during the past three years."

Mrs. Smith said the nation was menaced by the "moderate use of liquor" and an "attitude of tolerance toward drink."

"Even though people themselves may not drink, they have no basic objection to the use of liquor because they lack comprehensive knowledge."

She recommended the fight against the use of liquor be based on "our educational program . . . on total abstinence from a drug known to be poisonous and habit-forming."

FORD EXPO BUILDING IS AIRCOOLED FOR VISITORS' COMFORT

DALLAS, June 15.—No matter what the humidity or temperature may be elsewhere, visitors at the Ford exposition building at the Texas Centennial at Dallas will be assured a cool comfortable stroll at any time during the summer, a review of the building's features shows.

Two refrigeration machines having a cooling capacity equal to 350 tons of ice have been installed in the Ford building to maintain temperatures from 10 to 15 degrees lower than outdoors. The difference between inside and outside temperatures is prescribed by health authorities as the maximum to which visitors can be subjected without discomfort.

Within the building, volumes of cooled air will come down from the roof where it circulates through chilled water coils. Descending to the floor, the air enters floor ventilators and is returned to the cooling coils by the circulating system. The air-conditioning equipment, which also regulates humidity, cost approximately $125,000.

Other comfort features in the building include the restful rubber-leaf floor. There are 27,000 square feet of it. Side walls and ceiling of the structure have been treated for acoustical effects to absorb noise, and the entire atmosphere of the interior is to be one of quiet comfort.

Visitors will find numerous drinking water coolers conveniently placed in the building, and there will be first aid and rest rooms for all. A graduate nurse will be on duty and a physician will be instantly available.

A spacious court adjacent to the building boasts spreading shade trees and shrubbery. Easy chairs and benches are so arranged that the visitor may face a large band shell. Beyond this lies a lagoon. "Roads of the Southwest," a Ford feature, wind around the water course, within sight of the court.

Ford officials estimate that 5,000 persons may view exhibits in the building at one time without sacrificing any degree of comfort.

North Carolina, which at one time led all other states in the production of naval stores, today produces but five per cent of the nation's output.

She loved the blond cowboy—any fool could see that. She had gone with him, no doubt, from rodeo to circus, in the company of this Torrobin, who was their mutual friend, or the relative of one of them.

She had been tired of that life, and glad to escape from it. But she had not escaped from her interest in the cowboy or from her anxiety regarding him; and she did not wish Rupert to know of her connection with that life, or with the boy.

"She thinks, I'd tell Rupert," thought Dirk. "She thinks perhaps I've already told him what I know, so she doesn't intend that I shall know more."

But he did not discharge the men at the gate, and he did not order Martin to relax his vigil.

"Through November," he told himself.

Dirk saw that Hope was bundled in her new raccoon coat next morning, tucked the robes well about her. The day was dawning crisp and clear, with promise of an April-blue sky. Traces of the storm

He had no objection to her going, and he had no particular fear about leaving her behind. Her secrets, he had begun to believe, were innocent enough. Demos Ready for government to regulate wages, hours and working conditions. Workers generally have supported such regulation by the federal government.

Regarding the civil service plank in the republican platform, democrats pointed out that a bill providing for virtually all the provisions asked at Cleveland is pending in congress. Its chief sponsor is Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney, D., one time associate of James A. Farley in the management of the post office department.

Democrats, like the republicans, undoubtedly will favor a "sound currency" plank. The Philadelphia delegates probably will contend the Roosevelt administration has given the country just that kind of currency during the past three years.

They are expected to approve the agreement with China to buy a "substantial amount" of silver as one step toward the international cooperation leading to monetary stabilization advocated by the republican platform.

Since the presidential power to devalue the dollar expires Jan. 31, 1937, it is probable the democrats will not quarrel with the republican request that constitutional authority to devalue the dollar be restored to congress. President Roosevelt now has the power under authority of an act of congress to devalue the dollar to 50 per cent of its pre-depression valuation.

Trade Still

though crop yields were greatly curtailed. The northwest had an over-abundance of rain, according to the Portland and Seattle reports and conditions were improved in the Minnesota and Dakotas regions. Half damaged deciduous fruit trees in southern Idaho. Six hundred cars of peaches were shipped from Georgia, compared with 797 last year. Postland estimated the northwest apple crop at 24,200,000 boxes, or 60 per cent of peak year production. Dallas reported the Texas cotton crop in excellent condition. Cool weather retarded corn and truck vegetables in the Denver area, but ranges were benefited and the lamb crop was above the 10-year average. A light Columbia river salmon catch was reported by Portland, due to high waters. Reduction in relief rolls was widespread with private industry accounting for much absorption. Industrial centers maintained operating schedules at recent high levels with indications pointing to an abnormally busy June. Slackening in the automobile industry was reflected in six centers, but raw and miscellaneous orders offset the automobile decline.

Gas Tax Total 40 Millions

Texas Motorists Will Pay Out That Much During Fiscal Year

AUSTIN, June 15. (AP)—Automobile owners will pay $40,000,000 gasoline tax during the fiscal year, 1935-36, State Comptroller George Sheppard estimated today. The tax is four cents a gallon. One cent goes to a fund to retire bonds issued by counties or road districts to build roads now in the state highway system. Another cent goes to schools. Two cents out of each four go to the highway department. Fiscal years begin September 1. Collections for the first nine months of the present fiscal year, including May, total $39,543,264. This is $2,456,131 more than for the corresponding period a year ago. The year's increase over last year is estimated to be $3,000,000. Largest increase was in April when $3,433,289 was collected, a gain of $487,723 over April, 1935. Centennial traffic is expected to make later months show big gains. Farming has caused big increase in gasoline sales but not in state income. Gasoline used for agriculture is tax free, the tax being refunded after accounts are audited. The comptroller's office now has 10,790 gasoline tax refund accounts.

"Mister, we've moved mountains"

"We've moved mountains in our time — me an' this old truck of mine," grins Jerry Baker. "Mister, when you got some haulin', just 'phone for us!"

Telephone calls mean jobs to Jerry; cracker boxes and crates and grand pianos to be picked up in one place and set down in another. Naturally he wants those calls to be fast and clear—without mistakes that might cost him money. And, at the same time, he wants his telephone bill to be reasonable.

Manufacturing telephone calls which measure up to Jerry's expectations is the big job of the men and women who work for this company.

It isn't an easy job. There are thousands of problems to be solved in the day-to-day workings of a great telephone system. It has been a fortunate thing for Jerry that behind the people who handle his calls stands the entire specialized organization of the Bell System: the services of American Telephone & Telegraph Company's great central staff—the researches and inventions of Bell Laboratories—the savings which come from the buying and manufacturing organization of Western Electric.

Jerry Baker, "moving mountains" with his truck and his telephone, may seldom give a thought to the things they do for him. . . .

Yet with every call that comes to him he benefits from the work they have done. Not only have they helped make his calls faster, clearer and better but in the face of the growing complexity of the telephone system, they have helped this company hold the cost down to a price he is willing and able to pay.
