WRONG RIGHT-OF-WAY ...

The pedestrian has the right-of-way. Students at Tech seem to have taken this little axiom to heart, literally. Re-gardless of traffic lights and non-crossing zones, we cross campus streets as if there were no such thing as an automobile.

The situation is especially bad between classes. We are in a rush to get to the next class. We approach the streets as though they were open country roads. With a hurried glance in each direction we walk out into a calculated risk: Can I get across before that car gets here? Will he stop if I get in his way?

The traffic signal on the southwest corner of the circle between the Administration and the Chemistry Buildings is a good example. At the light, and for a short distance in each direction from it, there is a mass exodus in all directions between classes. The motorist, who may be in just as much of a hurry as the walkers must literally feel his way among the pedestrians. On a green light for the cootorist to move, he often must "push" pedestrians out of this path. No regard is paid the light or the crossing zone. There seems to be a prevailing "the-car-can-wait" attitude about the signal. But this particular crossing is by no means the only bad The traffic signal on the southwest corner of the

But this particular crossing is by no means the only bad area on campus. Any place where pedestrians cross, whether at designated lanes or between them, the situation is the same.

This is sheer inconsideration on the part of pedestrians. More important it is dangerous. What can be done about this? Of course, there is always the possibility of police direction of traffic. But no one wants this—neither motorist nor pedestrian. Another solution is the pedestrian's. A few seconds waiting on a signal or car can be better than a few weeks or months waiting in bed. Not only is consideration the better thing it is the safer.

There have been no accidents on campus so far this year, but it is far-fetched to think there won't be if the situation continues as is. So, how about giving the motorist a little-right-of-

way, too? -C. J. Wren

Animal Husbandry Dept. Experiments

Tech's animal husbandry de-partment is conducting an experi-ment to determine which cotton-seed hull products make the best feed for livestock. Six lots of yearling cattle are cach fed a different preparation. Listures are plain, pelleted, ground, containing stilhestrol, a synthetic hor mone, containing surcomycin, an antibiotic and a combination of stilhestrol and aurcomycin.

The cattle were purchased from the Joe Kirk Fulton ranch.
