Mountain Echoes

By Barbara Kingsbery

It's never failed—that we can remember—when we have referred to a certain story in article elsewhere in the same issue, and it has been left out of that certain edition! Last week we mentioned the final historical story by Mrs. C. D. Bruce, and as you probably noted, it was left out. Well, try again. Look for it this week!

Copies of Mrs. Bruce's book, They Came in Peace, are available at the NEWS office. The book is the only book about Coleman County pioneers since the publication of Beatrice Grady Gay's Into the Setting Sun, now out of print and almost unobtainable. Mrs. Bruce assisted with Mrs. Gay's book, published in the late 1930s.

Another series of articles is scheduled to start in the News right away. Rev. Bill Weeks, pastor of the United Presbyterian Church, has prepared a number of articles about youth, current fads, trends, etc., and we felt they would be enjoyed by our readers. We welcome your comment on these, and other stories published in the News.

We appreciated the beautiful—and delicious—tomatoes brought to the NEWS office by H. B. James. The large tomatoes were raised in the James yard, and six vines have more than supplied their family. They are some of the largest tomatoes we have ever seen, the largest measuring 11 inches in circumference.

The recent story by Mrs. John Hunter about early-day doctors brought response from Mrs. Adriene Long St. Clair of Poteet, the youngest daughter of the late Dr. and Mrs. Mrs. Adrienne Long St. Clair was born in the house which Mrs. Hunter described in her story. The Longs moved to Sweetwater from Santa Anna.

All former students and teachers of the local school are reminded again about the Ex-Students homecoming to be held on Friday and Saturday, September 25 and 26. The homecoming is a little earlier this year, so we'll all need to keep it in mind. The ex-student executive board is planning a very special homecoming this year, with further plans to be announced as they are completed. The Ex-Student of the Year and the Coming Home Queen will also be announced in a few weeks.

4-H Projects Help Eliminate Generation Gap

There does not seem to be a generation gap between 4-H youths and their parents, according to reports from 4-H sources.

One of the reasons, observes a 4-H spokesman, is that 4-H boys and girls are always doing things, a requirement of 4-H membership.

Since 4-H is a "learn-by-doing" educational process, the youngsters decide what they want to do, talk it over with their parents, and do it. And parents get involved, too.

For example, members working on a field crops science project are learning how to make things grown where they did not grow before, or improving crops on the family farm.

Whether 4-Hers live on a 1,000 acre spread or a 1-acre place, they study soil testing, planting, weed and insect control. They experiment with seed germination, effect of weather and light on plant growth, and different types of soil.

During the course of the project, parents learn new things, too. County extension agents and other specialists working for the Cooperative Extension Service supervise the 4-H program. What's more, dad or mother frequently volunteer as a project leader.

Projects vary according to interests, needs and availability of land. A work unit entitled "Exploring the World of plants and soils" outlines fascinating experiments for non-farm 4-H members and rural youths as well.

Information on how to be a part of the 4-H scene can be obtained from the county Extension Service office.

that I have is that this coming generation is not "worse" than mine or my father's, for that matter. The expression, "I don't know what this younger generation is leading to" certainly is not new. I heard it as a youth many times and my father often has told me that his father said the same thing many times.

by Bill Weeks

The purpose of this series of articles is to lead to a better understanding of our youth and what they are saying. I do not take the position that I am an authority on the youth of today but what I write is my own personal viewpoint which I base on my experience and personal knowledge. When the position or view of another is expressed it will be so noted.

I first want to say I do not like the often used expression "teen-agers" because it now carries a negative meaning for many people.

The second point, which I will be referring to several times, is that I do not accept the generally accepted interpretation of the also often used expression "generation gap."

The third thing I will be discussing is the expression "communication gap or breakdown." Part of this category will be a discussion of "their music."

The fourth thing I will discuss is the "hippies."

The fifth thing I will discuss, and these things may not come in the order listed, is the use of alcohol and narcotics by our youth.

Other things than those may appear in this column from time to time as I will respond to comments on these articles. I stand open to and welcome all comments both pro and con to what I write. These may be sent directly to me or through this newspaper.

All of what I say will not be in defense of the youth as I do not believe any of us are without fault. I do hope that the criticisms I make will be positive or constructive both to the youth and to the so-called "older generation." As I stated at the beginning, the intent is to lead to better understanding and communication.

To make my position clear I wish to state I have a firm faith in the majority of our youth today. I also feel, and will support this position, that the majority of the shortcomings they do have are the direct responsibility of the so-called older generation of which I am a part. I have found through my experience in working with youth most of my life that the expression "Don't trust anybody over thirty" is not held by the majority of the youth. I must also say, at this point, that the criticism leveled at us who are over thirty is often justified.

Another position or belief

Dr. Hofheinz who gave the address at the Santa Anna High School graduation exercises this year told me that "this younger generation has 'higher' morals than ours did at their age." This is certainly contrary to the belief held by many today. I have no statistics to back this up but neither do I have any reason to doubt his word. I think that it is appropriate at this time to state my position on so-called "permissive sex" which we hear so much about lately. This again is not a new thing created by this or any of the immediate generations preceding this generation.

In fact, anyone who reads very much in the Bible will find references to it there. I personally find this position to be totally unacceptable both from a social standpoint and from a religious one. Loose or low morals have never been acceptable to "good" people—Christian or otherwise.

As this is an introductory article I will not dwell on any one point at length. More on these things will come in later articles.

PLANTS AND THEIR SURVIVAL

A plant strives to survive much as do animals and people. Many have means by which to protect themselves. The rose has protective thorns, the thistle has sharp penetrating prickles and the cactus has strong, sharp spines. Other plants have chemical weapons such as succin, nettle and poison ivy.

It is said that without the thorns on the Cherokee rose it would have long ago disappeared because they taste so good to the grazing animals—the discouragement of the thorns has saved them.

Our floral arrangements last longer because they are gathered just at the right time to insure freshness. For that special occasion, brighten your home with our flowers.

Coleman, Texas

They Came In Peace

by Leona Bruce

Coleman County was the fortunate area where men came from varied places and backgrounds, and they came in peace, to make homes, farms and schools, roads and churches. Along with the mountain men from Tennessee were plantation owners from Mississippi, there were English and German and Scotch, men from Mexico and Ireland and France.

We have mentioned in an earlier article the fine German people who settled near Burkett, and also J. P. Morris. Then there was Andrew Hering, born in Oberkauffaun in the state of Hessen in Germany in 1840, and who was brought to Texas at four years of age, the family settling at Washington on the Brazos. He grew up and married there and was just the right age for the Confederate army and served with that force. When he returned, he learned that his young wife had died, leaving a baby daughter. Later he was married to Sophie Kettler of another German immigrant family and they became the parents of 11 children, 9 of whom lived to be grown.

Hering was ambitious and vigorous, and his farming success led him into the ginning business, along with owning many cattle. The good land farther west drew him, and in 1866 he came west and bought 14,000 acres which lay across the Coleman Runnels line.

After that he was not satisfied on the coastal plain. The next year he sold his gin and farmland near Brenham, packed several wagons with furniture and supplies, and prepared to start the trip. One worry was the gold money with which he planned to buy sheep and more land; there were tales of robberies now and then, and it was well known that he was going with the proceeds of his property in gold.

He had a pad made to go under a saddle, with space for the bags of money. One of his sons, while a small boy, had lost an arm in the gin machinery, and this boy was mounted on the saddle for the trip. Hering thought that no robber would suspect a one-armed boy on a sorry horse as having anything worth stealing. The long, slow journey, paced by the ox-wagons, was made safely, all of the family and the money reaching the ranch without incident.

Hering was not so much a ranchman as a land-buyer. He saw the opportunity in buying, improving and selling farms and ranches, making a profit each time. Most of his children went into ranching, and their descendants still live in the area.

A son, Andy, who married Emma Lindermann in 1889, moved to a ranch four miles north of Talpa which he had bought from his father at $2.50 an acre; this, too, lay across the county line, and they made their home on the Coleman side. As years went by they bought more land until at his death in 1943 he owned 4300 acres. One of their four children, the two daughters died in infancy, Alfred had no children, and Edgar had one son, Dale, who still owns the ranch.

Sometime after the family came to Coleman County the spelling of the name became Herring, no one seems sure when or why, thought some of the cousins still use the German version, Hering. The Coleman pioneer, Andrew, probably did not care. Along with his land buying and selling he owned stores and was director of a bank in Talpa. This was a good place for ambition and enthusiasm, and he had both.

A southern man who came early to Home Creek was Ben H. Pittman, coming in 1876, the last year of the Indian raids there. From the first he was a good citizen; in 1879 he was an officer of the law, either a constable or deputy sheriff under the sheriff John Elkins, and he and Pittman notified owner of saloon and "tin pan alley," Noah Armstrong, that a new state law prohibited the pool and tenpin tables which he was operating. It is said that Armstrong replaced the tenpins with croquet balls and continued the games, more or less inside the law. Pittman later became sheriff, serving three terms, and he was postmaster of Coleman during the administration of Woodrow Wilson.

Then we have not told of Tom Strong, the young lawyer who heard the west calling and came horseback to see what the new tent town had to offer. Records say that he married that fall, and that their son born the next year, also named Tom, was the first white child born in the county. This, of course, is inaccurate, as a number of children had been born at Camp Colorado, Trickham and other communities, but he probably was the first baby at Coleman and May Dunman and J. M. Elkins were the second and third.

And there is Lester West, who lived a good life of 102 years on his ranch in the hills west of Coleman; there are the Dunmans, very early here, and the Youngs, whose two log cabins on the bayou were raided by Indians more than once, in the middle '70's. John Warren tells of his grandparents, who drove their wagon into town in 1879, unharnessed and made camp, where Winstead's Paint Store is today, happy to have the shade of a tree, I think a hackberry or china.

So it is with a feeling of regret for an uncomplete task that the announcement is made that this is the last of Which Monopoly?

A great deal of a stir has been created in the Congress by what is known, among other names, as the "Failing Newspaper Act."

Basically, the purpose of the proposed bitterly contested legislation is to legalize situations whereby the publishers of two competing daily newspapers share certain facilities.

Originally, this plan started to share printing facilities, but in some cities this developed into a situation whereby the two competing publishers share advertising sales forces, and in some instances, even work out a division of profits.

One of the bad results of this situation has been the practice in some areas of adopting combination advertising rates. For example, if the city has a morning and evening newspaper, an advertiser can get a much lower rate by using the two papers in combination.

Often, it is charged, with some validity, that this practice exerts undue competitive pressure on suburban publishers. Obviously, if the nation is to continue its tradition of a free press, destructive competitive pressures are wrong.

But largely overlooked in the entire discussion of this matter is the fact that the mechanical unions in the printing industry exercise too much power.

For example, a newspaper will receive from an advertiser a complete engraved plate for an ad, arranged the way the advertiser wants it to run.

It is run from this plate, but the unions require that the ad be set up in the shop, then dumped into the "hell box" for remelting back into type metal.

The union domination over wages, hours, apprenticeships, and other phases of printing a newspaper was the force that compelled many publishers to seek some sort of a joint printing establishment.

This situation has become especially severe today when modern technology, except for union restrictions and rules, would make it possible to substantially reduce the costs of printing a newspaper.

Yet the printing unions keep applying the pressure, which among other results, made it necessary within the past five years for four major respected New York City newspapers to close down. The fact that this also eliminated jobs for their members did not seem to concern the unions heads.

Thus, as the nation's independent businessmen have long held in their halloing through the National Federation of Independent Business, it is time that unions be placed under the antitrust laws. In a free economy, no one has the right to act in restraint of trade.

Trickham News

By Mrs. Oscar Boenicke

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Stacy returned home last Thursday from a trip to visit their daughter and family the Bill Heidbriers at Fort Worth, and on to Cooper to visit relatives in that part of Texas. Carrie saw a niece she had not seen in 23 years. Carrie and Florence Stearns were born and raised near Cooper and they are the only ones of their family left. Then the Stacys came back to their daughters and spent Wednesday night and on home Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. G. K. Stearns and her mother, Mrs. May Sharp of Santa Anna, spent the weekend at Killeen visiting their son and grandson, Sherman and Dortha Stearns and Clint, also Dortha's mother was visiting them too.

A large crowd attended the REA meeting at Coleman last Friday night. They had a good program, a number from Trickham attended and two from our community had their names drawn for a gift. G. P. Laughlin or Minnie Wilson received a nice radio and the J. E. Yorks received a hand sander. We are glad so many people can be lucky.

Last Wednesday afternoon visitors with me were Jurita and Vicki Benge of Fort Worth, and Barbara Stephenson of Abilene. They came home with me from Santa Anna and later in the evening their grandparents came after them, Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Stephenson and Mrs. Charles Benge. They all had a picnic supper with us.

Author's Note:

Most of the stories of early Coleman County are in the book, They Came In Peace, which is now on sale at the by mail from Box 335, Santa Anna. The soft cover book is priced at $3.12, which includes tax.

A few copies of the beautifully bound hard cover edition will be available at $6.24. Mailing costs for either is 25 cents each.

They Came In Peace is my third book of Coleman County History. Trickham, Texas came out in 1968, Balister Was There in 1968, and also I collaborated with Beatrice Grady Gay on Into The Setting Sun in 1937, writing a part of it and drawing the map of the county for the frontispiece.

Two more books on Coleman County are partly written. They are Santa Anna's Peak, the story of the famous landmark, and First Lady on Home Creek, the sprightly daily record of Martha Tyler Overall of which you have sampled a part in the newspaper series.

In its earlier years Detroit was proclaimed as "the Constantinople of the Western World."

September 15. All elected community committeemen will meet at the ASCS office and elect two county committeemen. One for a three year period and one to fill the remaining term of Vernon Bullard, deceased. Two alternates will also be elected. The County Committee members will serve three year terms with one new member elected each year.

To nominate by petition only one name can be put on the petition and at least six eligible voters must sign. Farmers may sign as many petitions as they want. A farmer who is an owner, tenant or sharecropper is an eligible voter in the community in which his farm is located.

He can only nominate and vote in one community even though he has farming interests in more than one.

If six eligible candidates are nominated by petitions submitted by farmers in their community, no other nominations need be made. If less than six are nominated, the community committee will complete the slate, selecting candidates to make a total of six.

More than six farmers can be on the ballot provided they are all nominated by petitions.

The nominating period will begin July 28 and close August 17. This year we hope farmers in Coleman County will nominate by petition full slates for all four communities. A full slate means a minimum of six candidates to choose from in electing a community committee of 3 members and two alternates.

All ASC community committees are elected annually. The County Committee will count the ballots in the ASCS office in Coleman Tuesday.

DOVE SURVEY TO BE HELD

More than 44,000 Texas hunters will be receiving questionnaires from the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department as part of the first statewide mourning dove harvest slated for this September.

Ted Clark, project leader for the survey, urged that hunting license holders who receive the questionnaires complete and return them as soon as possible so the final sampling can be completed.

No postage is required on the computer-keyed questionnaires, and the only information requested is whether or not the respondent plans to hunt during the season Sept. 1 in the north zone and Sept. 26 in the south zone.

The hunters who indicate they plan to hunt will form the test group for the day-by-day survey.

The survey actually began several months ago. Clark said, when Department officials took every fifteenth hunting license issued in the last year as a random sampling. The hunters' names and addresses were transferred to computer tape for use in addressing the current questionnaire phase of the survey.

This September, each hunter in the survey group will receive 10 numbered IBM cards on which he is asked to record daily the county he hunted, number of hours spent hunting, number of doves bagged and the date of the hunt.

"We want to determine when, where and how many birds are killed in the state each year," Clark said. "Information from the harvest survey added to our ongoing banding program should give us an indication of the total mourning dove population."

Department studies have shown that there has been a significant decline in mourning dove nesting population during the past decade in Texas. Disease, droughts, predators, pesticides, loss of habitat and hunting all are possible factors in this decline, Clark said.

The harvest survey should determine the number of birds killed during the season and, in turn, provide the basis for assessing the effects of hunting pressure on the dove population.

Hunters picked at random for the survey are encouraged to cooperate so that future management practices will improve hunting for this important game species.
