AUSTIN-State Comptroller Bob Bullock recently canceled the sales tax permits of some 150,000 taxpayers who were shown as either delinquet or dormant on the Comptroller's books.

Bullock said that of the 150,000 permits being cancelled, at least 100,000 are known to be dormant and a majority of the remaining 50,000 would probably prove to be dormant, too, if they would file their reports.

Thoughts From Our Pastors By Dan Moffett

Pastor of Northside Baptist Church

"but as we were allowed of God to be put in trust with the gospel, then so we speak; no as pleasing men, but God, which trieth our hearts."

Whenever a person has come to know Jesus Christ as their Lord and Saviour, then that person was allowed of God to be put in trust with the gospel of Jesus.

This person that I speak of is known by the word Christian. Christian means Christ like. I will try, in everything that I do, to uplift Christ before others. This is the responsibility of Christians, to try the best that we can to speak for Christ.

There are many Christians today that are abusing this trust that God has given them.

JN 12:43 says, "For they loved the praise of men more than the praise

In 1 Thessalonians 2:4, Paul said, of God." There can be no compromise in your stand for Christ.

1Thessalonians 2:4 says, "Not as pleasing men." Many Christians today are in a fight for who is going to be the most popular. Christians are trying to please everyone they come in contact with. The only one they are not trying to please is God himself.

God is the FAther of Christians. He has said, I have allowed you to be put in trust with the gospel. God knows our hearts. He knows our every thought, and he is saying, please Me, not man.

God has rewards for Christians, but there are many rewards for the faithful Christians. Be faithful with that trust that God has allowed you to have in Christ.

The Red Notebook

The year was 1883. Smith and Elliott of San Saba were gathering a herd of cattle to start on the long trail to Kansas, where the best market had come with the arrival of the railroad there. All over Texas. the tread of the longhorns was about to begin, to Kansas or Nebraska or Wyoming; they were being gathered by the tens of thousands at Menardville and Victoria and Pecos, up the Llano and the San Saba and the Brazos.

Smith and Elliott were big operators. They would send several droves of about twenty-five hundred to three thousand, and for this first one, at San Saba, they wanted a trustworthy and experienced man in charge. John Banister was 28 years old, a former Texas Ranger, and already had been "up the trail" four times. A superior manager of cattle, knowing the terrain like a book, and a good judge of men and horses, he had the confidence of the cattlemen.

To begin the assembling of a cattle drive was like planning an important military maneuver. Besides locating and buying the cattle, they must be gathered at one ranch to separate the ages and types suitable for the long walk together. All drovers avoided, if possible, a herd of cows with calves, or calves being born on the way north. Big steers traveled best if all were grown and in good flesh: yearlings and big calves were hard to manage, constantly trying to turn back to their home range. The various ages were "cut out", the road brand burned on a hip, and held as far as possible from other herds.

Then there must be bought a remuda of good horses, eight or ten for each man, and it was not good for him to ride any other than those assigned to him. Usually the men owned their saddles and bedrolls, and these must be of good quality to last the trip. A strong wagon and a team of oxen or more or less gentle horses or mules were necessary; the chuck-box on the rear must be furnished, and everything thought of, to the last pot and skillet, tin plate, fork and knife. A few medicines for emergencies, a record book, ammunition and letters of credit, extra rope and leathers for reins, stamped envelopes for mailing along the way - the details were countless. Then there was the problem of the men. Besides the leader, they must be young and active, experienced with cattle, not inclined to quarrel or to make trouble, and willing to ride all day and take their turns at guard, to ride at a top speed in the dark in case of a stampede, to make their utmost effort night and day for two thousand miles, for thirty dollars a month; men of sagacity, nerve and

Among the many purchases John Banister must make, the first was a little red notebook, along the red rippled paper cover was a loop for a pencil. But John, a perfectionist, used pen and ink, and the entries in his clear and legible script tell of the list, in two and a half pages. Smith and Elliott did their banking business at Round Rock, and John was given a letter of credit there for anything he might think necessary to buy.

Headed "cash paid out for Smith and Elliott", he began on April 25 by buying one messbox for $1, a clock for $3.50, kerosene and a funnel, wagon bows (30 cents each), and $4.40 worth of sperm oil. He bought a camp kettle also that day, but the cook he had hired must have told him he needed another. The old Ranger way of cooking was to put everything into the pot, boil it fast and eat it fast, but the men on the trail must have good food, well-cooked, and quantities of it. With the new pot he bought a pan for 30 cents, a coffee mill, four pounds of horseshoe nails and a wagon sheet which cost $3.25. He also needed "2 snapps" and 2 leather straps for the messbox. It must be airtight, to float if the rivers were too deep and washed the wagon over.

Then there were a stopple rope and a whip and two pounds of rope. Telegraphing and expressage on the sperm oil were $2.40; he must have axle grease and castile soap, a bottle of liniment for a horse, two bottles of pickles and a jug half full of vinegar. Next were noted 30 pounds of salt and 20 pounds of dried

Rounding up horses was William Terry, who hunted horses for two days; also one Nichols was on this duty for three days, and B. F. Davis was paid $3.50 for two days branding cattle. Sam Daniels worked six days and Will Banister three, starting the herd, also a critical time when many of the cattle would try night and day to return to the home range. This Will Banister was John's younger brother, who later changed the spelling of his name to Bannister, a thing John would never do. They had been born at Banister, Missouri, and Banisters had been proud Americans since long before the Revolution.

It is difficult for us who live where the trail dust used to settle, to realize what a phenomenon the trail driving industry actually was. Never in the history of the world had there been such a business, on so large a scale, and operated in peace except for some Indian interference. Within some twenty to thirty years, tens of millions of cattle from the South, chiefly from Texas, walked their way north to fill three basic needs; the United States government was buying to give to the Indians for food, the arrival of the railroads provided transport to the cities of the northeast, and the rapidly growing numbers of settlers in the Central and Western states needed cattle for stocking their ranges. The cow, as strange to the Indian as the grizzly was to the white man, set foot on the prairies and within thirty years had altered the economy and upset the commerce of the wide empire forever.

But the trail drivers never thought of all this. There were innumerable cattle in Texas, there was a great market in the Central states, and the logical thing to do was to walk the cattle where the railroad ended. And that was what they set out to do; learning with every day and every drive the dangers and the successes they would encounter.

On May third, now that the grass had "risen" and the cattle would fatten all the way. Banister's crew headed the big steers out of the holding ground and headed them northwest, toward the Colorado River. The streams in this area were easy to cross with many shallow places where the gravels shone just under the ripples. It was a four-day drive to Coleman, crossing the herd over Hords Creek, just north of the little town which had no courthouse but did have a small jail.

At Coleman, John bought 28 pounds of beef, and at Fort Griffin he got a gallon of syrup and 8 pounds of prunes. The clock didn't work right; at Fort Griffin it cost 50 cents to repair it, and there John bought 20 pounds of hominy and 8 of prunes. The crossing of the Brazos was noted in the red book, but at Doan's, or Red River, he bought a stopple rope.

Camp Supply, just what its name implies, was halfway across the Indian Territory; everything was more expensive there, but the letter of credit made it easy to buy. John bought 10 pounds of currants, 10 of beans, and 6 of baking powder. Now 20 pounds more of dried apples! What went with all those dried apples! Did the cook make piles of good, greasy fried pies, perhaps, the hungry men eating them as fast as he could fry them? Next they arrived at Deep Hole, buying currants and beans on the 13th. Good time they were making! And on and on up the trail. There was seldom a road, and the wagon must go where the cattle would follow.

The cook had breakfast ready before daylight and the men, having rolled their bedding and stacked the rolls in the wagon, ate a hurried meal. The wrangler, perhaps a young boy, brought up the horse herd to be saddled, and the cattle were headed out northward. The last night guard came in for breakfast while the cook completed his chores at the chuckbox. John or some trusted rider went ahead, scouting for the best route across

The turnover of riders was considerable on the trail. W. P. Cooper began on May 3 at San Saba and drew $10 advance that day and $2.50 at Richland Springs; on the 31st he bought a saddle for $23. which overdrew his monthly salary of $30. When they reached Albany he bought tobacco for $3 and a Winchester for $21.50. He also picked up a coffee pot and a vistol, and quit work the next day with only $1 cash coming to him. Where he went with his saddle, Winchester, pistol and coffee pot one can only guess.

G. W. Downing began on April 30. He bought a pair of leggings, spurs, saddle pockets and hatband that day on credit. Bridle bits and straps left him $14.85 cash when he turned back on the trail on May 31. Harry Hill was hired on May 1, drew $20 cash on the 8th, bought a horse for $40 and a hopple rope for $1.35. Harry was discharged the night of May 15th, and how he settled his debt with Smith and Elliott is not shown but it is marked paid.

Another San Saba man entered on the payroll on May 1 was F. H. Kelly who was presumably willing to go but had to have a complete new outfit - saddle and bridle at $28.50, 1 pair blankets, a slicker, a pair of gloves and a box of .45 cartridges. These he must have shot up, as at Seymour he bought another box at $1, just twice the price at San Saba. Kelly must have been a disappointment to John, as he was discharged on June 28 with very little money due him.

Walter Thomason joined the herd on May 10. He had a Colt .44 for which he bought cartridges and drew $1 at Coleman. Thomason didn't last long, as he was discharged on the morning of June 1. What had he done? Did he refuse to stand guard, or was he making trouble with the other men? John Black joined on that day and stayed with the herd until June 21. One Burnet began on May 15 and was fired on the 25th. And the herd walked north

James Tomlinson started on May 4 and rode it out all the way to Caldwell, Kansas. He bought a saddle at San Saba, drew $2.50 cash at Albany, got a pair of blankets at (Fort) Griffin, and a 25 cent bottle of iodine at Doan's on the Red River. His boot may have blistered his heel. Here he also bought a bottle of pills and one sarsaparilla for $1 and a pistol from Kelly for $12, so we find that Kelly went off without a pistol. On July 4 Tomlinson bought tobacco at Camp Supply, and here we run up on something new. One of the men was raffling off a saddle and Tomlinson took a chance at $4.75. It took two months and 29 days to reach the end of the trail, and good old Tomlinson was right there with John when the cattle were sold. S. A. Wilkinson began on May 1. He bought blankets and a canteen at Albany, gloves at Vernon, a chance at the saddle and quit work on June 1. J. T. Williams also began on May 1, but he quit when Harry Hill was fired on the 15th.

Joe Kerby was another casualty of the drive. He had nothing to begin with; he had to have a saddle, bridle and blanket, a slicker, a canteen and a pair of goggles. He must have been at the tail end, pushing the drag, where the dust was worst. He worked only 28 days and one morning he could face it no longer and he quit, owing Smith and Elliott $8. But James Clark bought his saddle from him and took up the debt, and also took a chance at the raffle saddle for $4.75. John picked up one George Brabin somewhere on June 1, who bought a raffle ticket, sold Tomlinson a horse for $25 and rode right through to Kansas. James Johnson worked 8 days, bought a raffle ticket and when he quit he had $3.25 in cash.

Who won the raffle saddle? That was not Smith and Elliott business, and John did not record it.

Other men rode now and then on the trail; A. Robertson, A. W. Downing, one Ruffner, E. R. Manning and F. E. Conrad. John had to watch the behavior and expertise of the men as well as the trail, the cattle and the weather, the supplies and the taste of the camp meals. Which man was cook is not told, but he probably was one of those who stayed on until the end of the trail. He may have been William Moody or James Herron or Walter Jones or Bill Rutledge, but was probably Dad Jones, a dedicated cowman but too old, perhaps, to endure the rigors of night guard, many hours in the saddle and the accidents of the drive.

S. A. Wilkinsin was a high-priced man at $35 a month, but he didn't last long. Only very few of the San Saba men stayed all the way while the cattle walked north; for some of these, this was the only or last drive to the Kansas market, but to any of the riders it was an experience they could never forget.

On September 8 there is this modest entry: Above account settled. Did a representative of Smith

Well, after looking through last week's paper as it came off the press. I thought, "The pictures in this paper were better than that." Well, after discussing the way the pictures looked with others, we decided that the halftones were not left to develop long enough. We had a new girl (Babs) start to work this past week. Well actually, Babs has worked for the paper two other times. But as happens anytime, she needed to refresh herself on doing the halftones. Hope the pictures do better this week. Wish us luck. dt

I was really sorry to hear about the tornado that hit Sweetwater this past Saturday, with people losing their lives and homes. The tornado hit with no warning, and hit so early on a Saturday morning. Let's be thankful that we have a warning system here in Santa Anna, and a fire department that works for the benefit of the people. Freddie Dodson, firemen secretary, informed me Tuesday morning that the firemen get out and about the city and the outskirts to watch the clouds for any threatening weather. We are to remember that when threatening weather is sighted the fire department will ring three (3) long blasts on the fire whistle.

We have really been having nice weather this past week. Cool mornings and evenings and bearable during the day. The sun has been shining with very few clouds in the sky. We could sure use some more rain, and I am sure the Lord will send it and Elliott meet John there and sell the herd, or were they put on grass to sell later? This is not noted, but John bought a bell collar, had a horse shod, and got supplies for the much faster ride back to San Saba. The entries in the little book are in John's tiny, precise script. The pen and ink were carried somewhere in the wagon, and one can imagine that he spent an hour every now and then, writing letters to the sweet young girl, Mary Walker, whom he was to marry as soon as he got back to San Saba. He had spent almost no money for himself, and the salary he had saved, at $100 a month, would set them up nicely in housekeeping needs.

Preparing for the much faster trip south to Texas. John sold the wagon and team; these were in great demand among the settlers in Kansas and Nebraska. Any article that was usable could be sold and only the most needed John kept. He bought a rope and cornmeal and bacon, packed all their effects on a partly gentle horse, and they turned nomeward. Names of the men who came with him are not recorded, but John's bookkeeping tells them, as they arrived at San Saba on September 12 and he paid the final accounts that day.

The importance of the industry of cattle driving to the new territories astounds students of the time. Had the tens of thousands of settlers not been able to buy cattle, cows for milk for the children and calves for butchering, starvation would have been added to the privations to be endured. And the primitive steam engines puffing their way to the northern cities, drawing the little cattle cars crowded with live beeves changed the diets of millions of people of all nationalities in the meat cities and in the countryside as well. Not many years was this industry to endure, but while the enormous vacuum was there, and the almost endless flow of cattle came to fill it, it dominated the southwest. And it changed the undersized peoples from Europe, who had seldom known the nutrition that red meat provides, so that their children were all taller, heavier and stronger.

Where did the men go, those who were on this cattle drive with John Banister? Some located where they left him, some drifted here and there, some went on later drives, experienced now under the firm and wise training of the young trailboss. Banister himself became a Special Agent for the Santa Fe, a United States Treasury agent on the Rio Grande tracing smuggled cattle, and an Inspector for the Cattle Raisers' Association of Texas, now a nationwide organization. He organized and headed the Field Inspection Service, tracing cattle thieves in three states, with two assistants; this is in force today, with nearly two hundred inspectors, checking brands at all cattle sales. His grave in the Santa Anna Cemetery bears a Texas Historical Marker, recounting some of his service to his country. Some of the other names are on gravestones in lonely little graveyards; few are remembered, some are forever lost. But each of these men did a little toward the winning of the west, and they and their kind did it all.

and Elliott meet John there and sell the herd, or were they put on grass to sell later? This is not noted, but John bought a bell collar, had a horse shod, and got supplies for the much faster ride back to San Saba. The entries in the little book are in John's tiny, precise script. The pen and ink were carried somewhere in the wagon, and one can imagine that he spent an hour every now and then, writing letters to the sweet young girl, Mary Walker, whom he was to marry as soon as he got back to San Saba. He had spent almost no money for himself, and the salary he had saved, at $100 a month, would set them up nicely in housekeeping

Preparing for the much faster trip south to Texas, John sold the wagon and team; these were in great demand among the settlers in Kansas and Nebraska. Any article that was usable could be sold, and only the most needed John kept. He bought a rope and cornmeal and bacon, packed all their effects on a partly gentle horse, and they turned nomeward. Names of the men who came with him are not recorded, but

John's bookkeeping tells them, as they arrived at San Saba on September 12 and he paid the final accounts that day. The importance of the industry of cattle driving to the new territories astounds students of the time. Had the tens of thousands of settlers not been able to buy cattle, cows for milk for the children and calves for butchering, starvation would have been added to the privations to be endured. And the primitive steam engines puffing their way to the northern cities, drawing the little eattle cars crowded with live beeves changed the diets of millions of people of all nationalities in the rreat cities and in the countryside is well. Not many years was this industry to endure, but while the enormous vacuum was there, and the almost endless flow of cattle came to fill it, it dominated the southwest. And it changed the undersized peoples from Europe, who had seldom known the nutrition that red meat provides, so that their children were all taller, heavier and stronger.

Where did the men go, those who were on this cattle drive with John Banister? Some located where they left him, some drifted here and there, some went on later drives, experienced now under the firm and wise training of the young trailboss. Banister himself became a Special Agent for the Santa Fe, a United States Treasury agent on the Rio Grande tracing smuggled cattle, and an Inspector for the Cattle Raisers' Association of Texas, now a nationwide organization. He organized and headed the Field Inspection Service, tracing cattle thieves in three states, with two assistants; this is in force today, with nearly two hundred inspectors, checking brands at all cattle sales. His grave in the Santa Anna Cemetery bears a Texas Historical Marker, recounting some of his service to his country. Some of the other names are on gravestones in lonely little graveyards; few are remembered, some are forever lost. But each of these men did a little toward the winning of the west, and they and their kind

Clean-up Day Saturday

It's time to start gathering up that unsightly trash that you need to have hauled away, to help make our community a more attractive place to live.

It's also time to start putting on that volunteer cap and get in on the action of helping on clean-up day. Although the Chamber of Commerce is sponsoring the clean-up, many volunteers will be needed to make the project a success.

fCity workers are volunteering their time and the city trucks will be used, although there probably will be a need for others to colunteer use of their trucks and pick-ups.

The armory grounds will once again be the meeting place for all volunteer workers and equipment. Volunteers shoul meet at the Armory at 8 a.m. on Saturday morning. The Chamber will feed all workers hamburgers for lunch.

Anyone having large items such as appliances, furniture, etc. or anything too large for the regular garbage pick-up, may call either Gary Absher at 348-3781 or Rod Musick at 348-3145 to arrange for these items to be hauled away on clean-up day.

"This Town Is Your Town, This Town Is Our Town," so let's all "Pitch In" on Saturday, April 26.

Mrs. Earl Day and CTCC Faculty Central Texas Commercial College Brownwood, Texas 76801

Dear Mrs. Day and Faculty:

I have been intending to write you and let you know how I am doing in the business world.

In September of '84 1 got a position in the Industrial Engineering Department of Texas A&M University. I work as a secretary/word processor for several professors. I really enjoy my work, and I feel fortunate to have gotten this position in such a short time. My husband, who is a student at A&M, and I moved here in late August and I started working September 7.

I feel that the time I spent at CTCC was very beneficial to me in finding a job. One of the main requirements for this job was word processing and thanks to CTCC and Mrs. Smith I had word processing experience. Another requirement was a typing speed of at least 55 wpm; here again I have to thank CTCC. When I took my typing test my speed was 65 wpm, which was better than the average person applying.

I just wanted to let you all know how I am doing and what I am doing. Thank you all for the help I received at CTCC.

Career Oriented College - Central Texas Commerical College

CTCC is a very special kind of school. It's a career oriented college in which the curriculum offered each student contributes directly to the skills necessary for

The liberal arts college is an ideal place for those young adults who love learning for its own sake, who would rather read than eat, and who gain enjoyment from writing a research paper. Yet of those who do manage to complete their 4-year program, a large percentage find themselves with no marketable skill upon entry into the employment market. Therefore, high school graduates need to evaluate any college being considered as a consumer product, in terms of time spent and, more importantly, in future returns.

At CTCC there is no wasted time. Each program has but one objective: to prepare you for a career immediately upon graduation. You see, we're more interested in preparing you for a career than in giving you a degree
