What Is A Luxury?

CONGRESS is seeking to balance the budget. The way you balance a budget is to first try to reduce expenses. Very quickly you find out that you can not reduce expenses. Every time you find a nice place to start reducing you find also somebody's toe in that spot and the wall that goes up so softens your heart that you just can't do it.

One of the simplest ways to raise new taxes is to call something or other a luxury and start in to tax the tar out of that. You can call almost anything a luxury and get away with it. Says the eminent economist, Will Rogers, "Anything outside of meat and bread and a candle, breechcloth can be called a luxury."

could get along without books and magazines and musical instruments. We could get along without virtually everything except the necessities of meat and bread and breechcloth.

The point this commentary seeks to make is that in singling out individual industries for the levying of a tremendous tax, while other industries go free is an example of unequal and unjust and illogical taxation policy which, if permitted in, will not only ruin those industries thus discriminated against, but will eventually undermine the industrial structure of this country.

MEET HERE TODAY
SUSAN CAREY, 29 and beautiful, has become engaged to marry ERNEST HEATH, her former employer. She is secretly in love with BOB DUNBAR, who is said to have an understanding with DENISE ACKROYD, a girl of his own set. Heath's wife has just secured a Reno divorce. Susan's chief motive is promising to marry Heath in the desire to provide for the future of her AUNT JESSIE, who has cared for her since childhood. Her aunt is ill now and Heath has arranged to send her south. Susan is staying with the MILTONS, old friends. BEN LAMPSON, an old suitor, shoots at Heath one night in a fit of jealousy, injuring him slightly. Lampson then turns the gun on himself. After several days of illness the doctor announces that Lampson will recover. Heath takes Susan to the theater.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY
CHAPTER XXXVIII
The curtain had risen on the first act when Susan and Ernest Heath drifted down the aisle of the theater. More than one head turned to look at the tall girl in the regular simple wrap of brown fur. There were one or two whispers as Heath was recognized. He had forgotten his original caution and desire to avoid publicity in his eagerness to take Susan about. Although impatient for the marriage to take place he had agreed to wait for her aunt's return.

Now, conscious of the craned necks and the whispers, he felt only a glow of pride. The girl was so beautiful! She had a look of grace about her.

Susan leaned forward absorbed in the play, and the man watched her with interest. It was not until the curtain dropped again and the lights came on that Susan drew a deep breath and returned to reality.

"You like it?"
"Oh, so much!" The color came up in her cheeks and her eyes were starry. "Don't you?"
"Well, it's all right—only all these British comedies sound alike."
"They may to you but I've never seen one before and I think it's wonderful," she confided with a happy little laugh.

Susan loosened her wrap and leaned back looking about her for the first time. As by a magnet her gaze was drawn to a little group in the box just to the left. Irresistibly her eyes clung to the three people balancing on the little gilt chairs with her bright hair combed demurely back from a brow of camellia whiteness.

Susan's heart plunged as she realized the identity of the fair-haired young man whose head was turned away from her. Try as she might, she could not take her eyes away.

As though impelled by Susan's gaze the man turned and stared at her. For the fraction of an instant something quivered between them. Then the girl inclined her head with dignity and looked swiftly away. Her pulses were racing now. This was just as she had dreamed.

"Someone you know?" Heath asked curiously, noting the quality of her bow.

Susan never knew how she answered him. She was fighting desperately for control. All her hard won defenses seemed shattered by this encounter.

Meantime, in the box another little drama was being enacted. The bright haired girl in black had followed the direction of Bob Dunbar's glance and had seen him flushed. She laughed coolly.

"Oh—ho, your little friend turns up again!" she said. "Who's that with her?" Denise leaned forward, frankly staring. At the glimpse of Heath's aristocratic profile she whistled softly. "As I live and breathe," she muttered, "she's begged Old Propriety himself!" She saw Bob's spine stiffen and returned with zest to the attack. "Look what she's wearing," she said, enjoying herself thoroughly now. "She's! Mother said when she was in Madame Eba's the other day the talk was that old Heath had a girl around town now."

Fiercely Bob interrupted her. "Don't be a fool!" he said. "You know Susan Carey isn't that kind." Denise shrugged. "You know more about her than I do, Smarty." She turned her attention to the other member of the party, a youth who looked like a professional tango dancer.

The dark youth said something that made Denise laugh immoderately just as the curtain rose again. So far as Susan was concerned, that second act was a muddle. People bubbled in high British voices of unimportant nothings, and slim, sophisticated girls lounged in, strewing pajamas about.

In her heart the old, dull pain throbbled again and yet she was not sorry she had seen Bob. She had been living, she felt, for this hour. Her whole being was keyed up to the possibility of seeing again that beloved face. She would suffer for it but that was unimportant.

During the second interval Susan determinedly kept her eyes away from the box, but just as the lights went off, quite against her will, her eyes flashed in that direction. The box was empty. They had gone. The world suddenly went gray. What she had expected she scarcely knew. Perhaps she had hoped against hope that as the well-dressed throngs milled out into the foyer her shoulder might brush against Bob's. He would look up and smile. Perhaps he would shake hands. She would give everything she owned at this instant to slip her tingling palm into the grip of his strong fingers. It would be something to remember, something to treasure. But now he had gone and she would not see him.

What had happened was this: Denise and the Spanish youth had seen the play before and Bob, who was raging in his heart at the conversation touching Susan, was quite ready to concur in their proposal to go on some place and dance. He wanted overwhelmingly to hurt someone. Since he could not hurt Susan he turned the battery of his sarcastic fury upon his two companions.

Denise ordered the taxi driver to stop.

"Look here, if you don't like us you know what you can do," she said crudely. "Bobby's in a boat of a temper," she explained to the other man. "I stepped on his pet corn and he doesn't like it. Flow and I want to go places and have fun. If you're going to crab the party you'd better get out."

Bob bowed low to her. "That's all right with me," he said elaborately. "That's fine." The door slammed after him.

"I didn't know he hadn't had a drop of any," he was drunk. Denise muttered, peering after Dunbar as he sauntered down the street. She was not far from right. The young man was drunk with fury and despair. Passers-by turned to stare at the tall, hatless youth in evening clothes. One or two timid women scuttled anxiously in the direction of a policeman's booth after he passed. His eyes were wild and he was talking to himself.

Without consciously directing his course he turned his steps toward the theater he had just left. The night was sharply cold but he was not aware of it. As he swung along he discovered that he was carrying an object in the curve of his arm. He examined it and found it was his opera hat. He laughed suddenly and called the thing into the middle of the street where it lay on the car tracks.

As he stared the building his steps quickened. The pavement was deserted. Perhaps the play was over and Susan had gone. Ah that was it! He knew now why he had come back. It was for a glimpse of her, of the girl he had embraced. "Embarrassed! That's good!" he barked aloud, frightening an old cleaning woman who was trotting along homeward. He had thought Susan everything that was good and pure. In an age when young men scorned ideals he had built one about this girl.

Manlike, he felt now that he hated her for having destroyed his dream. Nevertheless he had to see her. That glimpse of her pearl-pale face through crowded aisles had been tantalizing. He did not mean to speak to her. He only wanted to stand close enough to see the downward flicker of those long lashes, and perhaps to hear the sound of her voice. It was odd how well he remembered everything about this girl. She had a little trick of catching her lower lip in her teeth. He wanted to see her do that. He wanted to look into her eyes again and determine whether they were gray or black. It tormented him not to know.

The play was over at last. An attendant came out and hooked the doors open and people drifted out in twos and threes.

Where was she? Had she, too, fired of the comedy and left before it was over? Dunbar's anger turned to apprehension now. He bowed absently to two or three down-agers waiting for their car. Where was she? He had searched for her for weeks and here she had been all the time, playing around with this older man—this man in whose employ she had been. His mouth twisted angrily.

At last he caught a glimpse of her through the crowd. In that cumbersome wrap of petal soft fur Susan looked the veriest young princess.

He might plunge through the

The girl looked cool and composed as he watched her. Heath handed her into the car with a decidedly proprietary air.

"Damn him!" muttered the boy in the shadow.

The car began to slide away and Dunbar woke to life. The pain throbbled in his breast. He was losing her again—he might never see her.

He began to run. "Susan, Susan," he called.

The policeman directing traffic took the young man by the arm. Bob began to laugh mirthlessly. "It's all right," he told the officer. "It's all right." He shook off the detaining hand.

Trans-Atlantic Flier Has Broken Nose After Sea Rescue

NEW YORK (UP)—Lou Reicher, the American flier trying to beat Lindbergh's time from Newark to Paris, is on his way here again aboard the liner President Roosevelt.

Reicher was rescued at sea Friday night when his plane fell 47 miles from Fastnet Island near Ireland.

Captain George Frier, famed for his Antioch and Florida sea rescues, was in command of the liner.

Frier's nose was broken in the fall.

SPORTS ON PARADE

By CURTIS BISHOP

The latest eligibility squabble in District 4, or 8 as it is going to be numbered this year, is over George Delker, San Angelo fullback. Blondy Cross had the following to say concerning this dispute Sunday morning:

"How about George Delker? Is he or is he not eligible? Several of the cash customers have asked the question the past few days."

"The big fullback of the Bobcats so far as your correspondent has been able to learn is in fine shape technically as well as physically speaking."

"The hubbalooboo about Delker started two or three weeks ago when our elephantine friend, J. Gordon Bristow, the Big Spring mentor, advanced opinion that Delker will be thrown out under the Texas interscholastic league four year participation rule. Bristow said, 'Now, I'm not going to do a thing about it or tell a soul. I don't believe in that kind of racket, but some of these other schools are liable to cause some trouble. I understand McCamey and Sweetwater are laying for him.' Then Bristow marched to the files of this newspaper and without a fumble pointed out a story written back in 1928 about a junior high game with the Ballinger Juniors. In this report appeared the name of Delker."

"Previous to the Bristow visitation the conductor of this column had checked on Delker. There were rumors, probably started by Bristow himself. There was a cross-check and a double-check. According to Frank Jackson, junior coach in 1928, Delker did not come out for football until the last couple of weeks of the season and did not participate so much as a minute in any game. Jackson said Delker wasn't even a worthy third-string substitute at that time. Delker made the same declaration. There was a check with the school records and not a line was found about Delker participating in athletics that year."

"The writer did not even see Delker nor did he ever hear of Delker until the track season of 1930, when he noticed a lanky, raw recruit romping around the oval with Bill Bassett's crack speedsters and casually asked who the kid was."

"As for the report in the paper back in 1928, we pass the buck. The day of the game we were covering a contest in Breckenridge between the Buckaroos and the Cisco Lobos, by the way, copped 26 to 0, and Breckenridge sportsmen had been giving six points."

"A reporter who was not familiar with the players on the high school squad much less the junior squadron wrote the story of the junior-Ballinger meeting. When a substitute went in some kid on the sideline said he was Delker. The reporter took his word for it, but it was not until several weeks later that Delker donned a football uniform."

"That's the layout. What are the learned gentlemen who guide the destinies of this football district going to do about it?"

This writer will not attempt to answer the San Angelo scrivener's inquiry. We will, however, go as far to remind the Concho enthusiasts that once before in Texas interscholastic history a player was declared ineligible when the evidence was very much similar to the Delker case. That was in 1930, if we remember the date correctly, and the victim was Johnny Connel of Cisco High. Connel introduced an affidavit of his coach as principal, again we beg for leniency as to the exactness of our reminiscence, but was nevertheless blacklisted. Along with him was "Cornbread" Ray, center.

"Blondy" Crouch, the smooth-working, self-confident burler that was probably the best moundsman in the city baseball league for two years, is now located in Abilene and appeared on the roster of the Abilene diamond representatives against the Sweetwater club last Friday. Crouch hurled the last six innings and allowed only one run, but his team lost 6 to 2. He formerly pitched for the Laundrymen and the Richco Club. He sends his regards to Billy Bass, the three Madisons, Newton, and all the rest of his old friends of the lamented city league circuit.

Here and there: Howard Miller and Jack Christian have been elected to succeed Pat Murphy and Johnny Gregg as assistant coaches at Abilene High next year—grim

Cloudcroft, N. M. Vacation Center

The Herald is pleased to publish the following article on the attractiveness of Cloudcroft, N. M., for summer vacations, as a courtesy to those conducting hotels, tourist resorts and other institutions for the summer vacationist in that vicinity:

The American public is said to have spent Three Hundred Million Dollars abroad last year. How much of it came back to the U. S. A.?

Probably not "one thin dime." Let's keep that money at home this year, and see some of the great wonders of our own country, places that one may visit at a very nominal cost, and in so doing keep the money circulating in America.

You owe yourself a vacation. A complete change in your daily mode of living. New sights, different food, new ways of exercising or relaxing which mean return to your duties rebuilt in mind and body.

For those who live in the Middle West, permit us to suggest a few points of interest easily accessible by auto or rail.

Cloudcroft Caverns, the king of underground wonders. A National Park where one may spend hours marveling at the magnificent formations of Mother Nature, whose lavish hands have created multi-colored draperies and festoons of delicate lace work and neighboring stalactites and stalagmites of such magnitude as to vitally exhaust one's comprehension of the millions of years required in their making.

The cities of Carlsbad, Artesia and Roswell offer attraction which will add to your comfort and pleasure.

Cloudcroft: After your trip through the caverns we suggest a rest in the balsam-laden ozone of that delightful mountain resort, Cloudcroft, which may be reached over good highways via Artesia, Roswell or El Paso (and Juarez).

Cloudcroft boasts a modern resort hotel - The Lodge - operated by M. B. Hutchins for the past seventeen summers, and there are smaller hotels and cabins available.

Golf: Divot diggers all enjoy golf on the highest links in America, a well-kept nine-hole course of unusual beauty.

Bowling, tennis, horseback riding, hiking, dancing add to your happiness.

From Cloudcroft one may motor to the great "white sands," visit the Mesquero Apaches in their native haunts, the old courthouse at Lincoln where Willie the Kid killed his guards and escaped; and if not pressed for time, go on to Albuquerque, Santa Fe, Taos, all interesting; then to the Painted Desert, Petrified Forest and the Grand Canyon.

New Mexico is filled with scenic and historic spots and a vacation

2 Different Methods of Shopping

WHICH DO YOU USE?

There are two methods of shopping. But which method you use makes a great deal of difference, since you always want satisfaction from the things you buy.

Some people shop in such a trustful fashion. They merely ask for a can of peaches, a tube of tooth-paste or a box of aspirin. Because they never specify what brands they want, they are always at the mercy of the clerk. No wonder people who buy this way are often so dissatisfied!

Other shoppers, who know by experience or the reputations of certain products which brands are dependable, ask for these brands specifically by name. And they insist on getting the products they ask for, even though some clerk may urge them to try something "just as good."

Isn't it better to buy this way? Isn't it wiser to ask for what you want, what you know is always good—refusing other products of which you know nothing?

Stores which try to sell you unknown products in place of those you ask for, usually do so for a selfish purpose. The dealer often reaps an extra profit, or the clerk a commission, by switching you to the unknown merchandise!

Many of the best stores everywhere forbid this practise. When you buy from them you are always sure of getting exactly what you ask for, with full value in the merchandise you want for every penny you spend.

But if you are offered something "just as good" as the thing you ask for, refuse it! Demand packaged products which you know by experience, by brand, or by the reputations of their makers. You will often see such products advertised in this newspaper.

Ask for what you want! Insist on getting it! Millions of women have found this simple rule the surest guide to shopping satisfaction.

pay no Federal income tax and that the average man contributes to the national government income principally through sales tax on tobacco, perfume and other luxuries and non-essentials.

"Advocates of slashing government expenditures will result in a material tax relief to the man of small income. Reduction of the tax burden of about 97 per cent of our people must come through the reduction of state and local taxes—this is quoted from the article.

Well, all we've got to say is that, no matter how strong their arguments may be, Federal employees might as well get ready to take some cuts—provided the will of that very 77 per cent of the public is recognized in congress.

Maybe the federal government does not tax 97 per cent of the people to amount to anything. But we all know that cost of operating the federal government, as well as state and local governments, has risen rapidly for many years. Appropriations made to operate departments, bureaus, etc., already created rose so rapidly that congress now is having a hard time "balancing the budget"—that is by the process of raising taxes more than by reducing appropriations and expenditures.

State Senator Carl Hardin told the West Texas Chamber of Commerce convention the other day that in his six years on the senate appropriations committee he had never heard a citizen come before that committee pleading for reduction in an appropriation. On the other hand, he had heard many pleading for leaving of various taxes.

Wonder who is to blame, after all, for "these high taxes"?

"Poppy" Day Near At Hand, Reminds Legion Auxiliary

The members of the American Legion Auxiliary will observe Memorial Day (May 30) with a sale of poppies. Regarding this sale, Mrs. J. S. King, president, has the following to say:

"A nation is built on its memories. Happy the nation with noble and inspiring memories. Every nation commemorates certain events in its history that appeal to national pride or national emotions. The emotions that stir a whole nation are deeper and stronger than any man knows.

Since 1865, this nation has set aside one day each year to commemorate its soldier dead. The idea was conceived by a soldier of the Civil War, Adjutant General N. P. Chipman. The suggestion struck a responsive chord in the hearts of American people that insured success.

"The first Memorial Day was observed by the whole nation. The soldiers who were living marched together to the cemeteries and decorated the graves of their fallen comrades and held memorial services for them.

"This beautiful service once observed could not be abandoned. Each year thereafter this memorial service was repeated. Each year the number of those who marched became smaller, their step became feebler and some could march no longer. But still the nation remembered its soldiers on Memorial Day.

"Then came other wars and other soldiers joined those who were sleeping. Other homes were broken, and other hearts were stricken. The comrades of these soldiers, too, march on Memorial Day—youth march now beside the old. Again the line of those who march is long. Again we bow our heads in mourning for those recently gone from among us.

"Memorial Day needs no proclamation to insure its observance. It is observed in the hearts of the people. It is a great national emotion of mingled pain and joy, born of untold loss."

Fine Arts Day Scheduled By Hyperion Club

Other Study Clubs Of City To Be Honor Guests At Program

The Hyperion Club has completed its plans for the Fine Arts Program which it will give at the Settles Hotel next Saturday afternoon from 3 until 5.

This will be the closing meeting of the club season and will be one of the most attractive and certainly the most unique club social event of the year. It will rank second only to the tea complimenting Mrs. Janabelle Fortune, Dallas writer, whom the club entertained at its annual Christmas reception.

The honor guests of the Fine Arts program will be the members of all study clubs of the city and of the Executive Board members of the City Federation and the West Texas Memorial Museum.

The presidents of these organizations and the president of the Hyperion Club, Mrs. R. T. Piner, will be in the receiving line.

The club will present on its Fine Arts program the artists of the city with brush, pen and musical instruments. Several of the numbers will be original; in this respect the program will be especially distinctive.

The purpose of the numbers is to show to the club women of the city the extreme versatility and cleverness of many of its local artists. For a town of its size, located so far from the cultural sections of the country, Big Spring has expressed itself in the fine arts in a splendid and sincere fashion. Several of the city's outstanding musicians, the Dawes trio, and Miss Elsie Willis, are not in town at present and the club regrets its inability to include them in the program.

Among those who will appear on the musical section are Mrs. Bruce Frazier, pianist; Mr. Crowley, composer of songs; Mrs. Ned Beaudreau, violinist; Mrs. V. H. Flew-ellen in her unique presentation of cowboy melodies; Mrs. Robert Hardy, soloist, and Mrs. Harry Hurt, pianist. Mrs. B. E. Blount will sing Mrs. W. A. Stall's song, "Mary Alone," set to music by David Gulon.

Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Caylor will be present and a sketch of Mr. Caylor's life will be given.

Mrs. H. S. Faw and Mrs. J. L. Sullivan, two popular story writers of the town, will each read a published story. Mrs. E. R. Watts will read several of her poems. The readings will be given by Mrs. Lee Weathers and Mrs. Tracy T. Smith. Both will read, if possible, selections from local writers. The program in full will be published later in the week.

TODAY and TOMORROW

By WALTER LIPPMANN

The Rout In Washington

By a vote of nearly five to one and after a debate of only forty minutes the House on Monday passed a bill which would create three new classes of government dependents and obligate the taxpayers to provide something like a hundred million dollars a year for perhaps fifty or sixty years to come. The three new classes are, first, widows of men who were a uniform for ninety days, providing the widow married the veteran five years before his death and providing that in addition to her earnings she has a net income of less than $250 a year; second, the child of a veteran until the age of sixteen or until they marry providing the child does not have an actual net income of $400 a year; and third, any child of a veteran for the whole of his life if that child is permanently incapable of self-support by reason of mental or physical defect.

The actual payments provided are small; for widows the sum is only $20 a month, for a widow with children it is $6 a month additional for each child, for a child when is an orphan it is $30 a month, and $4 additional for each of his brothers and sisters. But as the committee reporting the bill pointed out: "While this measure is not what we want, it is the best we could do under the circumstances. It is indeed. For once the principle is established that the government must support the widows and children of veterans, the actual cash payments can be increased whenever Congressmen feel that they need to buy some more votes.

By its legislation during the last ten years Congress has created a privileged class, a class of men who have rights which no other citizens possess. All that is needed to be a member of that class is to have put on a uniform a day or two before the war ended. By this new legislation the privileges of this class would become hereditary. Our own historical experience shows that once established such privileges are never renounced and never reduced. They can only be increased.

If the country agrees to the hereditary principle, it will have created a new class of voters who will hang together because they have a common interest in appropriations from the Treasury. Because they hang together they will terrorize it. If it were done with the veterans' bloc, we shall then have the widows' bloc and the guardians of orphans' bloc. That ought to constitute a large enough body of voters to make it impossible for Congress ever to resist any demand from the veterans' lobbies.

There are no doubt some Congressmen who sincerely believe that a man who once wore a uniform has done such extraordinary service to the nation that he and his widow and his children and even his parents are entitled to draw money from the treasury for decades to come. But there are not many congressmen who really think that. Most of them believe that the financial obligation has been discharged except to men disabled in the line of duty and to the dependents of men who died in the service. Why then do they vote these measures?

They vote them because they wish to be re-elected. Because they like to draw $10,000 a year. Because they like the perquisites. Because they like the importance which they enjoy. Because they hope to become senators and governors. That is the whole of it. By voting public money to the widows and veterans' widows they are able to buy a good many votes. It is as crude as that.

What is a nation to do when it finds itself the victim of such a traffic? Nothing, unless it has the moral strength to rise under new leaders who will lead a crusade against this utter demoralization of representative government. The London Times was right when it said this week that

...What disturbed the American public is that congress, instead of setting an example of steadiness and co-operation to a country facing a crisis, has allowed itself to become bewildered and disorganized. Still more disturbing is the fact that party leaders seem almost to have abandoned their functions at a time when their guidance is so urgently needed.

Where are the party leaders in this crisis? It is silly and theoretical and academic to suggest that the demoralization in Washington is bad enough, and the consequences it may entail dangerous enough to warrant the recognized leaders
