Approval Of State Sales Tax Is Asked

Texas Committee Favors Levy For Retirement Of Bonded Debt

AUSTIN (AP)—A constitutional amendment to provide for a two per cent sales tax for retirement of all bonded indebtedness of the state's political subdivision will be recommended by the Senate Tax Program Committee.

Sen. Arthur P. Duggan, of Littlefield, chairman, said Monday the committee chose that method as one which would give "real relief for property taxpayers." He said it would lift a $30,000,000 annual burden from property, while abolition of the state ad valorem tax would remove only $20,000,000.

Tighten Tax Rules

That decision he said would preclude the committee's recommendation of a sales tax to raise revenue for current state operations. Likewise it would not conflict with the incoming administration's opposition to a sales tax in that the issue would be submitted to the people.

Senator Duggan said the committee's recommendation to the Legislature would not call for any new tax of a substantial amount. Collection of delinquent taxes, together with a general tightening of existing taxes, he said, will be relied upon to eliminate, or reduce, the current $15,000,000 deficit and to provide funds for operating expenses.

Will Prepare Resolution

A joint resolution proposing the sales tax constitutional amendment, he said, will be prepared by the committee. It would allocate five per cent of the revenue to the state for liquidation of $20,000,000 state relief bond issue and return the remainder to counties for apportionment to the various political subdivisions. Their aggregate bonded debt, he said, approached $700,000,000.

The yield from a two per cent sales levy was forecast at $80,000,000 annually, which he termed adequate to meet service costs on the outstanding bonds. "The proposal encompassed, he said, a plan for obtaining interest rate reductions and state supervision to prevent excessive issuance of bonds in the future."

Hamblin Is Resting Following Hunting Accident Sunday

Frank Hamblin, who sustained gunshot wounds about the face and body while hunting seven miles west of the city Sunday afternoon with Dr. G. T. Hall and C. E. Warner, was resting comfortably late Tuesday afternoon at Big Spring hospital.

Hamblin received worst injury to his left eye, loss of which has been feared.

Following a consultation late Monday, attending physicians, including an eye specialist from Dallas, said they would await developments for seven to ten days before performing an operation for removal of the eye. They said chances are fair for Hamblin to recover sight in the eye, and an operation might be unnecessary.

Roosevelt Talk Used As Reason For Settlement

WASHINGTON (AP)—Frank N. Belgrando, Jr., commander of the American Legion, declared Tuesday it would press for immediate payment of the soldiers' bonus despite the opposition of President Roosevelt. In a statement he contended Roosevelt's anti-payment letter Monday contained "one of the strongest arguments in favor of immediate payment of adjusted service certificates I have read."

Reference was to the president's reminder that when veterans borrowed 50 per cent of the face value of certificates it was used largely to discharge their debts.

Happy New Year!

If you happen to be one of those householders who burn bituminous coal from the Western Pennsylvania fields, take time enough off from your celebration to look in the cellar and see whether you have sufficient fuel to run you through the winter.

Soft coal will always be available from other sources but there is a grand prospect that Western Pennsylvania is about to be shut down by a strike.

Officials of the United Mine Workers of America have almost reached the conclusion that operations in Western Pennsylvania are chiseling against NRA code provisions to a point where wages and hours of the miners will soon be endangered.

Unless conditions are remedied, President John L. Lewis may well call a strike in this field to enforce code compliance. If there is a walk-out it will be originally at the expense of individual companies whom the United Mine Workers are convinced are cutting corners.

The history of such strikes is that they soon become general in the whole field affected, and spread to the mines of suspected operators in other districts.

Incapable

President Lewis, of the Mine Workers, already has put NRA Division Administrator Wayne Ellis on notice. In a hitherto unpublished letter, the union leader asserted: "You are aware that the minimum price structure of the bituminous coal industry has suffered practical collapse throughout wide mining areas. Large groups of producers are most flagrant in their violations of the trade practices and price regulations of the Bituminous Coal Code.

"It is incontestable that the deliberate wrecking of the approved price structure of the industry places the wage structure in jeopardy. The United Mine Workers of America do not propose to en-

On the whole, Texas has been fortunate—especially so in settling conflicts and disorders such as strikes, but the careless laggard attitude in failing to safeguard human life in regulation and control of traffic is far from creditable. There have been many accidents in which drivers of cars were not solely responsible; there always will be lack of judgment that has serious consequences, both on the part of drivers and of others; but nearly everywhere except in Texas, the penalty is severe for taking human life, either by design or by accident. The coming year should afford full protection for the person, not guilty of criminal carelessness, and rigid penalties for him who is guilty. The death of Mrs. F. M. Bralley, who had been living for a time in Austin, brought back to fresh remembrance, in the minds of thousands of Texas parents and young women, the splendid service in the cause of education of her late husband, Dr. F. M. Bralley, president for many years of the College of Industrial Arts.

Dr. Bralley was one of the most mastery of schoolmen; a man whose life was an inspirational example, and whose leadership lifted public education to a higher plane in Texas. Mrs. Ada Lingo Hatcher left Sun-

The bewhiskered House of David basketballers will put on a spectacular show here Saturday night when they play George Brown's High school Steers. They combine a unusual amount of skill with a large portion of showmanship to give fans a top-notch treat. The Davids have played here twice before, and Coach Brown has been informed that they will be represented by practically the same team this year, and another hilarious contest may be expected. Lovers of basketball will see the game ably performed. But it is not necessary to know or care anything about the sport to get a thrill and a hearty laugh out of the clever antics of the long-haired lads.

TEXAS TOPICS

By Raymond Brooks

By RAYMOND BROOKS
AUSTIN—His Washington trip and holiday visit to Wichita Falls, which brought a respite to Governor Alford from the countless of floor and job-seekers, merely will reduce the drive upon him when he returns to his office about Jan. 1.

He averaged between 150 and 200 calls a day the last few days he spent in Austin—that many people saw him, besides others who found the crowd too great.

The governor-elect seems to enjoy the sort of grinding work, that is to enjoy meeting and greeting Texans, even where he is unable to impart the cheering news the visitors hope for. The warmth of his smile and the cordiality of his handshake haven't worn off since the car-palp.

Texans, counting up the things for which they owe thanks in 1934, have recalled the countless pictures in newspapers of riots and disorders, of strikers being beaten by police, of gangsters lying bullet-riddled in the ditch, of the bodies of victims of numerous tragedies or occasions of violence. They recall that Texas has had no such disorders or troubles that caused the wholesale slaughter or wounding of her citizens. None of the greater tragedies that have wracked a troubled world have occurred in Texas.

For these, her people can be grateful. Texans, several hundred of them, have been killed in needless traffic accidents; and at last, the aroused public sentiment that long has called for safeguards against such wanton waste of life has grown into a demand that it will not be wise for legislative bodies much longer to ignore.

CLEAR AWAY DEBRIS IN CANADIAN RAIL DISASTER

CONFIDENCE - THE MISSING ELEMENT

Twelve months ago the American people entered a year. They entered it with the profound hope that it would witness industrial recovery, that it would prove the success or failure of the governmental experiments that were inaugurated in 1932, that the great problems of unemployment, declining purchasing power, distressed agriculture and uncertainty on the part of property-owners, investors and industrial leaders would be, to at least some extent, solved. They hoped the year might be the turning point of the long period of depression—that it would show where we were going.

The greatest experimental 12 months in the history of our nation has ended and another New Year looms. During the past year there has been progress in some directions—there has been retrogression in others. Some businesses have been stimulated, some have sunk deeper into lethargy. Whether there has been any increase in regular employment is questionable. During the current winter close to 21,000,000 are being sustained by organized public relief. Reports from fact-gathering organizations show that those industries which sell perishable goods to the consumer—meats, packaged foods, clothing, fuel and so on—basic industries—those which employ the bulk of labor in normal times and represent either stable or are sinking back toward the abnormal levels of 1932. In some instances, of which the electric utilities are a case in point, industries are doing a greater volume of business—but, due to higher taxes and legislated increases in operating costs, are earning less profit, which results in growing hardships on millions of investors who depend on earnings from savings for living expenses.

The most difficult aspect of the recovery problem is this: There can be no recovery without CONFIDENCE, and as yet uncertainty, not confidence, remains uppermost in the minds of millions. People who have money that would ordinarily be invested in industrial undertakings, who would create jobs, buy supplies, build homes and stores and factories and develop farms, are frankly afraid. They are afraid that their capital will be taxed out of existence, or regulated out of existence, or condemned by legislative fiat, or destroyed by governmental competition with industries in which they might hope to compete.

This element of fear extends down from the largest industries and affects the whole industrial structure. The railroads and utilities, for example, face, on the one hand, the very definite problem of reduced business, rising taxes and diminishing earnings, while on the other hand they are threatened with the possibility of government ownership. Under such conditions, who can be expected to invest money freely and without fear, to develop industries and bring back controls to normal levels?

The security of banks, insurance companies and similar institutions is absolutely dependent upon the security of basic American industries, in which their depositors' and policyholders' money is invested. Anything which strikes at the welfare of basic industries strikes immediately at their welfare—and therefore at the welfare of every person who has a dollar in the bank or in the owner of an insurance policy.

To blame these conditions on a man, a party, or a group would be unjust. National distress naturally breeds experiment—the need for alleviation is so great that it seems as if anything were worth trying. But a great responsibility falls upon the citizen given high public office in such times—namely the responsibility of protecting our constitutional rights and privileges. There can be no greater duty, and no more necessary public task, if mistakes are made, they will be forgiven—but they should be corrected, not continued.

There are signs that this is being done now—signs pointing to a rapprochement between political and industrial leaders. If these groups honestly seek to cooperate to iron out misunderstandings and differences, our nation will make real progress toward recovery—we will regain the priceless ingredient of good times, CONFIDENCE. Let it once be known that investments will be encouraged and protected by government, that the honest business has nothing to fear from political influences, that savings will be held inviolate by those trusted with the management of our national affairs, that private property rights will be held sacred, and the road to prosperity will stretch clearly ahead.

There should be no despair on the part of the people. Our land is still fertile. Our industries are still great. Our intellectual abilities have been increased by the ordeal of depression. Only that intangible element—CONFIDENCE, based on the knowledge that our constitutional ideals will be maintained, not destroyed—is needed now.

THE SAME WAR FORMULA

That bloody little war between Bolivia and Paraguay continues to provide a first-rate laboratory model of war between major powers. Thus we find President Luis Tejada Sorzano of Bolivia announcing that Bolivia will "send its entire male population" to the Gran Chaco to fight, if necessary. The nation, he says, has refused no honorable chance to end the war; meanwhile, the war proceeds—"and we must do our duty."

Now this is a perfect reflection of the traditional attitude of the head of a war-making state. We must fight to the last man, we must make every sacrifice, we must make no peace unless honor is satisfied. . . . those phrases are made familiar by many generations of war and its attendant proclamations.

TO MAKE THE FARM ATTRACTIVE

David E. Lillenthal, power director of TVA, believes that the "big city jitters", which drew men and wealth from the nation's farms to the cities for so many years, has about run its course; and he suggests that one of the best ways of killing it for good is to go ahead with a broad-gauge program of electrification of farms.

Even today, he points out, fewer than ten per cent of American farms have electricity. A tremendous field awaits development, and he is probably quite right in asserting that an electrification program could be of the highest social value.

The long period in which huge numbers of people flocked to the cities from the farms did the na-

TODAY and TOMORROW

By WALTER LIPPMANN

II. Instead of the Dole

It is generally assumed that the alternative to a dole, that is, direct relief measured by the minimum needs of the unemployed, is either a public works program in the manner of PWA or a lot of useless activities intended to look like real work though they deceive nobody. The phrase, "public works", calls up in most minds either some elaborate project which will take years to finish and will cost millions of the taxpayers' money to operate or else it evokes a picture of men raking dead leaves in the city parks from one side of the path to the other.

The PWA as an instrument of recovery must be put down as worse than a failure. It can be shown, I think, that Mr. Ickes has created an organization and a procedure which is a vast improvement on the old pork barrel and has thus made a useful reform in the normal procedure of the Federal government. But as an emergency device for creating work and priming the pump, PWA has a sorry record. The amount of net additional employment created is negligible. What is much worse, the PWA by a wholly misconceived policy as to wages and handicapped by the mistake of NRA in fixing prices, has tended to peg construction costs at a level where private re-employment is not profitable. This is illustrated by an example cited in Professor Sumner Slichter's recent book called "Towards Stability", where in the South workers on PWA projects were paid $1.00 an hour while union men on private construction were striking for 75 cents an hour.

A much more successful attempt to create work promptly was made by the CWA last winter and the general public has never properly appreciated the variety and the amount of useful work done by the CWA. Any one who wishes to get an impression of that should look at the photographic history of CWA in a volume called "America Fights the Depression."

But CWA had one deep and destructive defect. It obtained its funds from PWA and had, therefore, to adopt the wage rates set by PWA. The result was that CWA workers earned a high rate of pay per hour, but because they were getting relief, were not allowed to earn it many hours a week. From the point of view of the work done this meant that the cost was high; from the point of view of the workers it meant that they could get a bare living by working only a few days a week. So the projects were expensive, and those who were deprived very little good. It deprived the rural regions of brains and energy they needed and made crowded cities more crowded than ever.

It can be checked permanently only by making rural life easier and pleasanter; and an electrification program should do much to accomplish that result.

James Harris has returned to his home in Abilene after spending the Christmas holidays with his brother, Miller Harris.

Nature is a poor substitute for an electric refrigerator in this part of Texas. If you are tempted to disconnect your refrigerator when cool weather comes, check over the weather records which show how few days are really cold enough to protect food from spoil—even if it is kept on an open porch.

A temperature of 50 degrees has been accepted as the top limit for proper refrigeration, but last year there were only about 20 days in all of December, January, February and March during which the temperature stayed below 50 degrees. In January last year the temperature stayed below 50 degrees only 5 days.

Seeks Leadership

With Rep. James Byrns of Tennessee apparently solidly in the lead for the speakership in the next congress, interest is being centered on the majority leadership, for which Rep. Clarence F. Lea (above) of California, chairman of the Democratic caucus, is one of the candidates. (Associated Press Photo)

content with a bare subsistence could obtain it by working a few days and idling the rest of the week. The system destroyed incentive to work and yet made the work costly. This, plus the inevitable errors of hasty improvisation and inadequate supervision and direction, was the ground of the justifiable complaints which were brought against CWA in all parts of the country.

If we examine the errors of PWA and CWA it becomes clear, I think that they arose from a failure to recognize that in a depression men can not sell their goods or their services at pre-depression prices. If they insist on pre-depression prices, they become unemployed. Both PWA and CWA were ruined by the fallacy current in all depressions that a little work or a small volume of sales at a high rate are preferable to much work or a large volume of sales at a lower rate. It is a fallacy not confined to PWA or CWA or the trade unions. It prevailed among most business men when the codes were written.

In the past, when trade was depressed and men could not find work, they migrated to new lands. The United States was settled by a migration of this sort. Now when men moved out into new lands they worked for what they could get. The West would not have been opened if the pioneers had insisted immediately upon or had been compelled by law to work at the same rate of pay per hour as prevailed in the older settled communities from which they came.

A government public works program to deal with unemployment should be looked upon a modern equivalent for the opening up of new lands to settlement. The program creates industrial opportunity by using cheap money to promote projects which, like the cultivation of new lands, add to the national wealth. Looked at this way, the rate of pay on emergency public works ought to be decisively lower than in established industries, but there ought to be enough of it so that a man working steadily will earn a weekly income larger than he could get from a dole or from partial employment.

A public works program based on this principle would have low labor costs. Valuable projects could be made economically sound on this level of costs. It would, therefore, not be really expensive. It would at the same time be based on the only sane theory of reward which is, that the more a man works the more he earns. It would do away with the lunatic theory that the way to increase jobs is to limit work. It would supply the only fair and searching test of whether a man actually wanted work or preferred to be supported by charity. It would put to the union leaders the practical question as to whether they prefer high rates and little work and therefore meager annual incomes or lower rates, more work, and better annual incomes.

Such a public works program would be a radically different thing ments or to correct them. For in the long run two billions spent unwisely would be far more expensive than four billions spent with the deliberate purpose of removing the causes of unemployment.

Hawaii Billboardless
 HONOLULU, T. H. (UP)—Among its other attractions, Hawaii now offers its visitors pure and undisturbed scenery. In all Hawaii there is not a single billboard. Boer signs erected in Hilo with a view of repeal were ordered removed recently after an insistent fight by women's organizations. Hilo authorities said the billboards were nuisances. So now there are none in Hawaii.

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. (UP)—There is one thing at least, for which this city may claim distinction. It has no child prodigies. School officials noticed this lack recently and began an investigation to see if some brilliant youngster could not be found. The search, even with the help of the public library, was unsuccessful. Nothing but acute normalness was discovered.

Plenty of Suckers in Oil Field
About a month ago a peddler called on most of the ladies in the oil field. He was selling some type of household magazine for 88c a year and with each subscription you received a beautiful padspread. He had one of the spreads with him and, as they could see it was expensive a large percent of the ladies subscribed, paying fifty cents down and were to have paid the rest when delivered a week later, a few were unfortunate enough to pay the whole amount, while others bought several. On the appointed date most of the ladies remained at home to receive their padspread, but they waited in vain. After a months waiting all they have is a receipt published by "The Honest Publishing Company" of Chicago and signed by Mrs. Jones.

Wilma Ruth Hudson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Hudson who did run the Forsan Telephone office, underwent an emergency operation Friday. She was reported to be doing as well as could be expected.

I did not kill Osborne

By VICTOR BRIDGES.

Chapter 26
MR. CRESSWELL

"I understand," said Jimmy Osborn. "You leave it to me, sir. I can't see how much that's going on."

I picked up an envelope from the table beside me, and jotted down Jerry's address and telephone number.

"Here you are," I said, "and here's a pound note just in case you want it. You're a stout fellow, Jimmy, and I'm much obliged to you."

He slipped the money and envelope into his trousers pocket and grinned cheerfully.

I looked up from the typewritten document which I was holding in my hand.

"But, hang it all," I protested. "This is absurd!"

Mr. Cresswell slipped his glass of port, and then, knocking the ash off his pipe, glanced at me over his spectacles.

"And where precisely does the absurdity come in?"

"Why, the whole thing's ridiculous. It's just a bare statement of your out-of-pocket expenses. You haven't charged a ha'penny for all the work you've done yourself!"

"I don't intend to," he said back, his head a little on one side and his face puckered up in a smile. "It has afforded me the utmost happiness to be able to help you, and no respectable solicitor charges for his own pleasures."

"That's all very well," I expostulated, "but—"

"Now listen to me, my dear boy. Your father was my oldest friend, and for that reason, even if I wasn't as fond of you as I am, I wouldn't dream of taking any more of your money. This wretched business has already cost you the best part of five hundred pounds. You will need what you have left—every penny of it. If I committed my own wishes, I would much prefer to throw that piece of paper into the fire, and regard the whole thing as finished, but since you insist upon a statement, you can send me a check for the amount stated there. Now fill up your glass, and don't let's argue about the matter any more."

I tucked the account into my inside pocket, and carried out his instructions.

"So be it," I said, "but I wish I could think of some way to express my gratitude. I'd like to make a full-length statue of you and stick it up in the middle of Bedford Row."

His eyes twinkled. "It's a tempting suggestion, but I think, on the whole, I should be better satisfied if you were to tell me a little more about your intimate plans and intentions." He scrutinized me.

to my word, even if by doing so I robbed myself of the much needed help and counsel which Mr. Cresswell was in a position to supply.

As I emerged into Parliament Square, the hands of Big Ben were pointing to half-past eleven. It was a dark windy night, with masses of black cloud chasing each other threateningly across the sky. Spots of rain were already beginning to fall, and having no desire to get wet through, I stopped a passing taxi and instructed the man to take me to Whitehall Court.

During the brief drive my mind was chiefly occupied with thoughts of Molly. In the absence of Jerry who, in company with George, had set off for Leigh, directly after breakfast, she and I had whiled away a pleasant and uneventful day wandering about Hampstead Heath, lunching at the Spantards and walking back through Regent's Park.

She had been in the best of spirits and apparently not in the least nervous. Nothing suspicious or unusual had happened since the incident with the waiter on the previous afternoon, and I had finally left her at the hotel at six-thirty, when she had announced her intention of having an early dinner, and reading a novel in her bedroom.

There was nothing in all this to make me the least apprehensive, and yet somehow or other I felt curiously worried about her. So strong was the sensation that I was inclined to change my mind and order the taxi-man to drive me to the Milan. On second thought, however, I abandoned the idea.

and waving him good night as he stood on his doorstep I started off along the deserted pavement of Barton street.

Considering all Cresswell's kindness and generosity, I had felt distinctly uncomfortable at not being able to tell him the truth. Apart, however, from the fact that he would certainly disapprove of the line which Jerry and I proposed to take, there was the unsurmountable barrier of my promise to Sir William Avon.

It was Sir William who had put us on to what, at all events, might prove to be the right track, and until he gave me permission to disclose his dealings with Osborne, I was in honor bound to respect his confidence.

If I could discover the real murderer through my own efforts, the whole story would naturally be bound to come out. Failing that, the only decent course was to stick

OIL NOTES

John I. Moore No. 1 McDowell, ordovician test in section 22, block 34, T-2-S, T&P survey, Glasscock county, is drilling ahead at 8,332 feet in black shale.

The year 1934 witnessed a revival of oil interest in West Texas. There were something like 750 wells to go down in the year's time and Howard and Glasscock counties got their share of the wells. Perhaps there were no more counties which got as much inside extension and development as Howard and Glasscock. One of the outstanding developments of the year was the extension of the Dodge-Dennan pool, the drilling of an ordovician test on the McDowell ranch.

Eyes of the oil trade here will watch another test in Borden in 1935, some developments in Scurry county, perhaps the ultimate completion of Ray Albright's test in Dawson, the Wright & Scott No. 1 Flannigan in Martin county, the completion of the McDowell ordovician, Noble Oil company is planning to try an extension to the Edwards pool. They have closed a deal with R. L. Gillen, half a mile south west of Lee's store.

A Dallas investment company, Murray Investment company, is reported to have closed a deal to buy the land of the latter's 150 for lease in SW 1-4 of Section 2, Block 30, T-1-S, TP survey in this county. The figure, to be paid in cash and oil, is said to be $90,000. This gives the investment control of all of section 2 except the south east corner, Sinclair-Phillips property.

"Open house" ON SUNDAY

THE hostess who can serve an impromptu meal efficiently and graciously to guests who drop in late Sunday afternoon or in the evening establishes an enviable reputation for hospitality.

Seemingly without effort, she transforms the formal appearance of the buffet into a most appetizing picture. Gaily the guests help themselves to the tasty food. Conversation becomes brighter. Everybody feels at home. There are pleasant compliments, too, when it's time to say goodbye.

How does she do it? It's likely that she gets many helpful suggestions from the advertisements in this newspaper.

Just notice the advertisements that tell of tempting varieties of cheese, potted meats and sea food; canned fruits and vegetables for salads; spicy relishes; tasty crisp crackers; dainty cakes and taste-tingling beverages. An assortment of these on your pantry shelves will reassure you when your friends drop in and will give your invitation—"Won't you stay for supper?"—a genuine cordial quality that cannot be denied.
