Be Careful with Your Kites

Kite flying, in close proximity to electric power transmission lines — especially high tension lines, many of which carry 66,000 volts of electric energy — is extremely dangerous to property and to human lives.

A damp string, coming into contact with an electric wire, may result in grave danger, and many boys fly kites with light wire, the most hazardous practice of all. The wise thing is to fly your kites out of range of electric wires — and above all, do not attempt to rescue a kite entangled in the wires. Just notify the office of the West Texas Utilities Company.

Observance of these simple precautions will eliminate: the possibility of serious injury.

Do you know that your increased use of Electric Berrit v is billed on a surprisitally loss rate schedule. ... and alds only a small amount to your total bill?"
