Treaty Results Indicate That Bi-Partisan Forces Hold Reins

However much they may differ on details, the bipartisan supporters of a unified foreign policy, are still in the saddle in the U. S. Senate. They demonstrated that by voting to ratify the Japanese peace treaty with only ten dissenting votes, one Democrat and nine Republicans.

There were no floor amendments, but as it came from the Senate Foreign Relations Committee there was a sort of reservation attached to it. This stated that "Nothing in the said treaty implies recognition on the part of the United States of the provisions in favor of the Soviet Union contained in the so-called Yal'a agreement regarding Japan of Feb. 11, 1945." This was a reference to Russia's taking over the Kurije Islands and the south half of Sakhalin Island.

As Chairman · Tom Connally explained March 4. "Actually, of course, the peace treaty has nothing to do with the Yalta agreement." The reservation was inserted to satisfy Senate sentiment, and its ittachment to the main treaty will not require renegotiation of the treaty with the other 47 signatory nations.

We have come a long way in treaty negotiation since 1919, when the Senate attached so many reservations to the League of Nations resolution that President Wilson insisted the result was nullification rather than ratification, and refused to accept them.

By contrast, the United Nations Charter was ratified without reservation, and so were the peace treaties with Hungary, Romania, Bulgaria and Italy.

Main reason for this change was that Wilson ignored the Senate, both whereas Roosevelt and Truman were careful to seek both the "advice" and the "consent" of the Senate in treaty matters. The North Atlantic Security Treaty was approved after amendments by Taft, Wherry and Watkins were defeated.

One can hope that regardless of the outcome of this year's election this spirit of cooperation between Senate and administration will continue for the good of

President's Book Stirs Lively Controversy With Ink Still Wet

The new book about Harry Truman, who collaborated in its preparation, absolutely proves two things, according to the viewpoint. 1. It proves that he intends to run again, 2. It proves he is not going to run again.

But run or not, with the ink herdly dry, it has already kicked up as much controversy as any book of recent times. It is the first real "inside Truman" story to come off the press and it is edited by William Hillman, a commentator for the Mutual Broadcasting System. He started the book after a series of interviews with Mr. Truman. As the work progressed the President rned over to Hillman a mass of letters, diaries, memos, documents and other written matter bearing on his occupancy of the White House his individuals and groups, his doubts and fears, his impressions and reactions.

He got fed up with the Soviets early in his career as President. 'I'm tired of babying the Russians," he wrote in a letter to his then Secretary of State, James Byrnes, who had entered some agreements with the Russians in December, 1945, that Truman did not like. Truman implies that he gave Byrnes a bawling out. "Absolutely untrue," stormed Byrnes from the governor's mansion in South

In this connection one of the late James Forrestal's memos is interesting. He said Truman was the first man to say no to

The book shows that Truman, among other things, said the U.S. should protest violently against Russia's conduct in Iran; predicted Russia would invade Turkey and seize the Dardanelles unless confronted by force; said the U. S. should make its own demands on Russia for free waterways, and demand a settlement of lend-lease. Finally, he said the U.S. should "maintain complete convol of Japan and the Pacific."

The book sells for $5. Its title: "Mr. President." Of its 80 000 words, 65,000 are direct quotes from Harry Truman's diaries, letters, memos and state papers. If its subsequent career kicks up as much interest and controversy as the first few excerpts from its pages, it may be the

U.S. Defense Mobilizer Reveals He Has No Production Schedule

WASHINGTON. - Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson, the man chiefly in charge of rearming the nation, has written a letter to Sen. Lyndon Johnson of Texas, so far confidential, giving the shocking ad mission that he has no schedule for the armament program.

This is the equivalent of running a railroad without a timetable. And it points to the probability that the President will have to get a new mobilization chief or else let arms production continue in its present bogged-down, belter-skelter condition.

When Wilson flew to Key West last December to discuss the arms program with President Truman, he told the press that arms production "was right up to our ov a schedules" and increasing at the rate of $1,000,000,000 a month.

But Senator Johnson, chairman of the Senate Preparedness Subcommittee, doubted this. He had previously warned that production was lagging, which was one reason Wilson made his hurried trip to Key West. So, following Wilson's statement. Senator Johnson wrote the mobilizer and asking the pointed question: "What are your production schedules?"

On Feb. 21. Mobilizer Wilson replied in a brief but revealing letter. Slightly paraphrased, ' read:

"I presume you are referring to my statement to the press at Key West...the word 'schedules' was not meant to be taken literally.... As a result, my meaning was misunderstood. I meant to say that the military production is keeping up to my expectations."

In this confession, Wilson revealed the amazing fact that he has no military production goals. He also revealed the basic reason way aluminum is now "running out of our ears," and why there is so much steel on hand that the steel industry privately would just as soon have a strike in order to use up the surplus.

were set up without any coordinated scheduling with military production.

On top of this, the military program is bogged down far worse than the public shocking facts that the enemy already knows about, but which the American people don't

1. In Korea today the Communists are firing twice as many artillery rounds as we are. Obviously they are well supplied, while our troops have to hold back. In fact, we are so short of shells that the Army has given shells priority over anything

2. The only jet fighter plane we have equal to the Russian MIG is the F-86 Sabre jet. Yet Russia is now producing MIGS at the rate of 3,500 a year while we are producing Sabre jets at the rate of only 200 a year. In other words, Russia is outproducing us at the rate of 18 to 1.

3. According to our estimates, the combined airplane production of the United States, England, France and all other NATO countries is not equal to Russian plane production and will not be for anoth-

4. Russin now has a combat air force of 20,000 planes, over half of them up-to-theminute jets. Probably we have a bigger total force when it comes to bombers and transport planes, but we are about 50 per cent below Russia when it comes to com bat planes and jet fighters.

5. Russia has about 10,000 planes in mothballs, ready for an emergency. We have only 8,000 planes in mothballs, and since have run out of spare parts of these older planes, we are now cannibalizing the mothball planes in order to get parts.

6 We have sent Europe less than half the military supplies we promised one year ago. NATO was organized on the theory that Europe would supply the men, we would supply the materiel. But though we have supplied men-despite a huge unemployment problem in some parts of Europe—we have fallen down on supplying planes, tanks, weapons. It is our recent about-fact and thu-demand that Europe supply more materiel that has disrupted European economies and led to the government crisis in France. These are some of the facts that the American public doesn't realize: also why American industry suddenly finds itself with surplus aluminum and some surplus steel at a time when materials were supposed to be tighter than ever.

I saw the other day where Mack Sena "man with classic style." nett, who did about as much as any in-dividual to revolutionize comedy in the American theater, picked what he con-sidered the ten greatest motion picture clowns of all time.

Most of the names you'll recognize. Grandpop can probably tell you a thing or two about the others.

Sennett's choice for the number one jester of all time is not very surprising. It's Charley Chaplin, Even Chaplin, who has fallen into disfavor in some quarters because of his politics, admits he belongs at the very top.

Next to Chaplin, Sennett ranks a couple of moderns that might make you blink, because they's just making their mark in the entertainment world. That would be Dean Martin and Jerry Lewis, who Mack says "have terrific talent."

Back of those three. Sennett places Marie Dresaler. Mack says it's regrettable that the modern generation has missed

In fifth place, Sennett has W. C. Fields,

Quite A Few Editors See Morris' Sharp Reactions As Justifiable

"Newbold Morris' -harp reaction to provocative statements and charges by Senators McCarthy, Nixon,and Mundt was justified. But a substantial majority of editors feel that, however great the provocation might be considered. Morris' bitter and sot-tempered counter-blast went too far, indicating that he does not have the cool and level head required for so important an assignment as his investigation of corruption in the Federal Government. The majority opinion is that Morris has seriously impaired whatever effectiveness his investigation might have had.

SAVANNAH GA MORNING NEWS (Ind.): "The inability of Newbold Morris to maintain a temperate and gentlemanly attitude toward members of a Senate subcommittee which is seeking to learn the truth about enormous profits from the purchase and sale of Government surplus tankers and oil shipments to Chinese Communists has virtually nullified any future value the New York Republican would have as a special presidential cleanup in-Mr. Morris from the outset objected to the committee's questions and assumed the role of an unfriendly wit-

NEW YORK TIMES (Ind.-Dem.): "Technically Mr. Morris was under fire because his law firm was associated with a tanker deal that the Senate is investigating; but some of his inquisitors may have been after him mainly because he, a Republican, had accepted President Truman's appointment as chief investigator of the scandals and corruption in the Federal Government To be subjected to the same kind of personal attack that many another distinguished public servant has suffered at the hands of a small coterie of Congressmen. .. was enough to explain the bitterness with which Mr. Morris turned on his termenters.

SOUTH BEND (Ind.) TRIBUNE (Ind. Rep.); "Mr. Morris was in an extra-ordinary position because in addition to beov witness in the sumbre chin investigation he was on exhibition, in effect, for judgment of his demeanor as Mr. Truman's selection as chief investigator of corruption in the federal government. When he said, among other things, that some of his senatorial questioners had 'diseased minds' he raised a question about his emotional balance which is pertinent to his assignment to investigate cor-

TRENTON (N. J.) TIMES (Ind.): "Mr. Morris is displaying commendable patence in difficult circumstances He has witnessed in recent months the transformation of his status from that of a highprincipled lawyer with a deep interest in governmental reform to something in the nature of a suspicious character. The technique has its political advantages also. While the chief investigator is busily engaged in expunging Red tinges, explaining the business connections of his law firm and varied aspects of his professional and private life, the critics can

To a considerable minority of editors coodemn his failure to get ahead with inquiry into corruption.

NORFOLK (Va.) - VIRGINIAN-PILOT (Ind.-Dem.): "The affair of the tankers was a curious and complex deal... The weight of the Morris law firm's participation, if any, in reprehensible transactions is proving so difficult for the Senate subcommittee to determine that those at a distance are justified in suspending judgment. But that Mr. Morris has made a mistake in the manner of his own reaction to the verbal battering of Senators McCarthy, Nixon and Mundt seems to us obvious. This is not a defense of Mc-Carthyism. It is a regret that Mr. Morris should have become so irritated that he came close to screaming his resent-DAYTON (Ohio) DAHLY NEWS (Ind. Dem. 7: "It wasn't pleasant, it wasn't pretty, this talking back that Morris did to the committee. But perfect little gentlemen never tame bullies. Morris may not have tamed McCarthy, but at least he fought him with the only weapon with which his kist can be fought effectively ... If the Senate wishes to preserve its essential dignity, the way to do it is to pass Sen. Benton's resolution to expel McCarthy, and to put the small minority of like-minded members on notice that the Senate is deter mined not only to enforce but also to merit the respect of America's citizenry,' YOUNGSTOWN (Ohio) VINDICATOR (Ind.-Dem.): "A much more placid man might well have been outraged when Mc-Carthy, discussing oil shipments to Red China before the Korean war, accused Morris of taking 'money soaked in American blood.' There was no evidence that Morris had any part in the shipments, or that they were put to military use ... However, despite the provocation Morris went too far in his counter-blasts... His haste and hot temper raise ... doubts that he is the right man to investigate corruption in the federal government. The task may well call for righteous indignation, but it also requires a cool and level head. -Edited by James Galloway

Harpoons Sent Into Victims

No member of the octopus family lives in fresh water, but thousands of ponds have strange little animals with arms. Not all ponds have them, and even if you look where they exist, you may miss

The tiny animals of which I speak are hydras. Usually their bodies are only half an inch long, or less. A hydra is a simple form of life. It is without any eyes or ears or nose, but it does have a mouth, also a stomach.

1º you look for a head on a hydra, you will fail to find one. It has nervecells, but these are spread through the hollow, tube-like body. One end of the body sends out a sticky juice, and this is used to anchor that end to an object, such as a stone or stick.

or a branch or leaf of a water plant. Although the body of a hydra seldom is more than half an inch long, there are tentacles around the mouth. A mouth may have only five or six of these around it, or more than a dozen. When the tentacles are stretched out, each of them may have a length of an inch.

There is a purpose in the stretching of the tentacles, and that purpose is to obtain food. From the tentacles come bollow threads, ofte barbed. The tiny threads send bits of poison into the victims caught in the water,

The stinging threads have been compared to little harpoons. They are used in capturing worms and other small forms

The victim is taken into the mouth which is an opening to the stomach. Then it is slowly digested.

Tests on hydras have proved that they know when they are hungry. After a good meal, they do very little stretching of the tentacles for a while. Some hydras are transparent, or almost transparent, making it possible to see the food inside their stomachs. Others take on a greenish or brownish color. For NATURE section of your scrap-
