THE LOG SCHOOL HOUSE (By Joe Sappington)

The old-time school was strictly a business institution, and was not given to frivolity and social dissipation. The school, that I attended, lasted from sunrise to sunset, and it was nothing uncommon for me to arrive home from school on evenings and find my father's family retired for the night and deep in slumber.

The old-time school teacher was a busy man, "from early morn till dewy eve," both mentally and physically, and never shirked a duty from teaching the smallest child its a-b-c's up to whipping some grown up man weighing 195 pounds in his overalls for the small offense of whispering during "books." During my school days, I never knew of a boy being expelled from school for misbehavior, no matter how large he was or what his offense might be. He sometimes retired from school for a season, but it was usually for the purpose of recovering from a fractured jaw or broken nose, received at an idle moment while resisting his teacher. The trustees in those days were never called upon like Cincinnatus' of old, to leave their plow handles, and repair to the school house for the purpose of devising ways and means of promoting harmony and a state of subordination among certain refractory pupils—the teacher alone did all the Cincinnatusing, subordinating and harmonizing that was necessary with a 7 foot dogwood switch, or perchance his good right fist.

One of the most serious draw-backs encountered by the old-fashioned teacher was the wild, unclassified condition of the school. He had to teach every kind of book brought to him, regardless of its antiquity, and I have seen in a school of 45 pupils, 27 distinct and separate brands of arithmetic, 19 grammars that bore no family resemblance to each other and about 13 geographies, some of them dating back to the Inquisition, while others were silent on the existence of the Western Hemisphere.

When it came to spelling, the entire school usually resolved itself into a committee of the whole and lined their toes up to a certain crack in the puncheon floor and proceeded to try to spell and pronounce as they went every syllable of every word that was given out by the teacher. I have known these classes to be composed of the lisping child, the blushing maid and the sturdy son of toil, wearing whiskers and a frock tail coat, and it was nothing unusual to see some boy wearing a calico slip "turning down" a bunch of these sturdy fellows, and bear off with triumph the "head mark."

Not only have the methods of teaching undergone a complete change since my school days, but the entire system of school games and sports have been supplanted as well. Where today can you find a boy who knows anything about townball, bullpen, stink-base, or anti-over? I once knew a big sandy-haired boy who weighed about 200 pounds, not counting his underwear (for he didn't wear any), who was an expert in playing townball, and I have known him to knock a 15-cent rubber ball 600 yards against a strong south wind and make seven and eight I's before the ball could be returned.

A schoolmate of mine (whose left foot was webbed) and I once formed a joint stock company in order to have a little fun out of our teacher's saddle mule. The mule's name was Jackson, and our teacher always tied Jackson to a tree that grew by the side of the school house and in a few feet of a stick and dirt chimney. We could rub the mule's back from our seats in the school house by just reaching out between the logs. This web-footed boy and I decided to turpentine Jackson in a quiet, unostentatious way, when no one was looking, and it was decided that the web-footed boy should bring the turpentine and I should administer it. The next day he showed up with the liquid fire and when the teacher was busily engaged with a class I reached thru the crack and poured the fluid upon Jackson's back. Presently there was a mighty noise, accompanied by a perfect hail of sticks and mud daubing, which filled the room. At this juncture someone screamed that the mule was mad and for every one to run for their lives. All of the girls and little boys fled in a body, screaming as they went, while the teacher and the larger boys climbed trees. The teacher called for volunteers and asked who would go for a gun with which to kill the mule. No sooner had he made the call for volunteers than a cross-eyed fellow nicknamed "Gizzard-Lip Bill," reached under his jeans coat tail and brought forth an old army cap and ball six-shooter about a yard long, leveled it in the direction of Jackson, pulled the trigger and bursted a cap; cocked his gun again, pulled the trigger and succeeded in ruining another good cap. Not until the sixth, the last cap, was tried did his six-shooter fire, and then every load went off at once; knocked Bill out of the tree, but missed the mule. Just at this time Jackson broke his rope and dashed off through the brush with nothing but a rope around his neck, having kicked the saddle all to pieces in the early part of the engagement. After the mule had fled we all came down from the trees, everybody was terribly excited and pandemonium reigned supreme. The alarm had been spread by the fleeing pupils that Jackson had gone suddenly mad, had wrecked the school house and was killing everything in sight. It was not long after we had reassembled at the school house before our rescuers began to arrive. They came singly and doubly; some came armed with shot-guns, some with rifles, some with pitchforks, and one old fellow with his whiskers streaming behind like the tail of a comet, came dashing in riding an old gray mare with a side-saddle and armed with a crow bar.

After the crowd became a little composed they went out where Jackson had been tied and began an investigation. They were not long in detecting the smell of turpentine and someone discovered the empty bottle. We were all ordered back into the school house, and after order had been restored the teacher arose and said, "someone has poured turpentine on that dumb beast of mine, and I am going to find out the guilty party before I dismiss school."

He then proceeded to call the boys present, asking each one as he stood up if he was guilty. Each boy answered in the negative; finally my turn came, and I stoutly denied any knowledge of the culprit. The next one called upon was the web-footed boy and to my horror he began to stutter and tremble and finally broke completely down and told the whole thing.

I was about three weeks in recovering from the whipping I got from the teacher, and five more weeks in getting over my father's part of it. For a long time afterwards it was freely predicted that I would be hanged or land in the penitentiary. The last news I had of the white-livered, web-footed cuss who turned traitor was that he was sanctified, hauling wood for a living and voting the Populist ticket.

WHAT is the quality that Giacomo Rimini, Margaret D'Alvarez, Cesare Formichi, Armand Tokatyan, Emma Trentini, William Faversham, Florence Reed, Paul Whiteman, and other famous singers, actors, broadcasters and public speakers have found that makes LUCKY STRIKES delightful and of no possible injury to their voices?

It was but recently, when I started to act as master of ceremonies with my band at the Paramount Theatre, that I realized how vital perfect voice conditions was to a performer. I have always been a consistent smoker and, fortunately, Lucky Strikes were my favorite brand. I like their toasted flavor and, best of all, I can smoke as often as I like, without fear of irritating my voice, which is becoming a great asset to my work.

For the answer we turned to medical men and asked them this question: Do you think from your experience with LUCKY STRIKE cigarettes that they are less irritating to sensitive or tender throats than other cigarettes, whatever the reason?

11,105* doctors answered this question "YES."

These figures represent the opinion and experience of doctors, those whose business it is to know.

Only Buick has an engine Vibrationless beyond belief

BUICK'S remarkable freedom from vibration is due primarily to three vitally important factors. First—the inherent smoothness of the Buick Valve-in-Head six-cylinder engine. Second—rubber engine mountings, front and rear. And third—the scientific and almost perfect balance of the entire Buick crankshaft assembly.

Only Buick enjoys these advantages. And only Buick provides the silken performance—the unvarying smoothness at all speeds—the longer life and greater serviceability of an engine vibrationless beyond belief.

TEXAS AND TEXANS

(By Will H. Mayes)

Texas Spirit Needed

The greatest need confronting Texas is the creation of a unified Texas spirit. We are not exactly a divided people but we lack a great deal of being united for the common interest of the State as a whole. This condition is due largely to two things: The State is so large and has such diversified interests that Texans do not get together enough to know each other; it is so young and so close to its colonization period that we still think and act as colonists, each settlement or community looking out largely for its own interests and concerned for the whole only in case of distress or extreme need. In smaller and older states it is easy to get the people to work together for the good of all. What is most needed is concerted effort to overcome these conditions and to get the people to thinking of, and working for, Texas as a whole. This column was started and has been conducted all along with that thought in mind and in the belief that the press would have to initiate and conduct any movement that would bring about unified effort.

Strength in Unity

The motto of Kentucky is "United we stand, divided we fall," and that is particularly true of Texas. The temptation to divide our efforts is constantly before us, and to a certain extent such division is necessary, for each section has its own peculiar interests that must first be considered. Sectional efforts are helpful, but something should be done to co-ordinate all these efforts into central working bodies so that the greater Texas may not be forgotten. We should know Texas, not merely our immediate part of Texas, but all of it. All improvement, all growth, comes from comparison. Isolated mountain countries are about as they were a century or more ago, and the little progress that has been made in them has come from the outside rather than from within the "settlements." There can be isolation on the plains, in the towns, in the cities where the colonialistic or tribal spirit is allowed to dominate. Texas must overcome and get away from purely selfish, localized narrowness. A broad state needs a broad vision.

Know Your State

We should know what others are doing if we would make any real advancement. The farmer who is following the methods of his forefathers is having as hard a time as they had or worse, because he has to compete with the improved ways of doing things. The merchant who is merchandising on the plans of ten years ago is a mossback, although he may not know it. The newspaper that is run as newspapers were then isn't worth a flip to its town and the place would be better off without it. The town that is making no progress is falling into decay. The farmer should watch the papers to see what other farmers in other sections are doing, and when he can he should visit the best farms of which he knows. The merchant can profit by seeing how merchants elsewhere are progressing. The editor should study the most progressive papers of his state to find why they succeed. Most evolution comes from resolution. Those who do not keep up with the procession soon fall so far behind that they are lost. It is largely by knowing where the procession is headed that you find the courage to keep step. Texas is headed toward progress. Are you?

Imitation Is Helpful

Whether we admit it or not, we are all imitators. Most of our actions are merely following leadership. We build roads, schoolhouses, churches, hotels, auditoriums, parks, hold county fairs, go to college, buy new cars, get new clothes, improve our farms, our homes, use modern machinery, make all our advancement, largely because others are doing these things. For this reason we should keep informed as to what others throughout our state are doing that is best for them, their communities and the state. Therefore we have to read to keep up, and should read those papers that keep us informed, those that themselves show some of the progress of which we would know. If any one knows how to do a thing better than we are doing, it behooves us to learn that way and use it to our advantage.

Planting Improved Pecans

Texas has been a bit slow in improving the native pecans and have allowed the states east of us to get ahead in that work. We are beginning to see, by comparison again, where we have been the losers, and now more pecans are being planted than ever before and more native trees are being budded to improved nuts. People are learning that pecans make pretty shade trees and can be grown easily, and many homes in both town and country now have young pecan trees growing. Even chambers of commerce are becoming interested, and out at Snyder in Scurry county, where most of us think trees will not grow, the chamber of commerce is sponsoring a pecan-planting campaign. There are very few sections in Texas where pecan trees will not do well when given the right attention for the first few years. There are few homes where room can not be made for a few trees. This is the planting season.

Municipal Buildings

Denton has dedicated a $100,000 municipal building, and a municipal band furnished the music. Santa Anna, a progressive Coleman county town, is planning a city hall with an auditorium in which to hold public entertainments. Other Texas towns are considering the building of municipal halls to accommodate the city officials and the fire companies and provide places for public gatherings. Most Texas towns are becoming interested in making community life attractive and to provide their people with facilities for pleasure and improvement. Municipal halls, parks, swimming pools, playgrounds for children, libraries and bands are gaining in popular favor all over Texas.

Measuring Texas Water Waste

It seems a pity to have Texans quarreling over water rights when they are allowing most of the rainfall to go to waste. The Board of Water Engineers is considering plans to find just how much of this rain is wasted, by measuring the water that runs through the streams. To one not an engineer it looked like enough rain fell in Texas the first ten days of this month to irrigate all the irrigable lands next summer and allow enough for all the hydro-electric power needed. Many dams were endangered and some were damaged by the heavy rainfall. Texas does not need more water as much as it needs to conserve that which falls.

Veteran Tells How It Feels to Live 106 Years—Smokes; Has Good Appetite
(From the San Angelo Daily)

T. M. Mayo, Confederate veteran, explained on the courthouse lawn Wednesday afternoon just how it feels to be 106.

"At 106 I feel just as I did at 100," he said in his halting yet clear tones. He was 106 in July.

Mr. Mayo, who was a farmer in Limestone County before he went to the Confederate home, spent most of his life walking between "two sticks," or plow handles. To the man who would live to be his age he has no set of "don'ts." "I chew, I smoke and I take a nip when I can get it," he said, "and can eat a dog, my appetite is so good, even if I haven't a tooth in my head."

The aged man says he sleeps nearly all day and night when he isn't defending his domino championship at the Confederate home. It has been only a matter of the last few weeks that he has adopted a cane which he carries. Mr. Mayo said the veterans at the hospital sometimes have a few disputes and that the canes are the usual weapons of attack and defense.

Mr. Mayo walks pretty well though his steps are very short and he lifts his feet with a visible effort. At 106 this is how he says he feels:

"I can see through my glasses only about twenty feet in front of me but I am unable to read, even though I enjoy it. My appetite is good. It would seem that a man of my age should have difficulty in remembering things that happened in the past. I can see the days of my childhood as if they were yesterday and the names of my friends come to mind often. I love to sleep now just as babies do, though I am not at all in what one would call the second childhood. As to the future I am not worried as the present contains many things to interest me."

Mr. Mayo, who fought with General Forest in the war, is said to be the oldest Confederate veteran in the state. He enjoys this distinction in the home of 300 at Austin.

Galli-Curci, World's Greatest Soprano, to Appear in Abilene

Abilene, Oct. 17.—Galli-Curci, world's greatest soprano, has been signed to appear here, on April 4th next year, by the Simmons University Cowboy Band, it has been announced by Gilbert Sandefer, manager of the band. This will be the first appearance of the renowned singer in Abilene and is expected to draw an audience from all over West Texas.

The Galli-Curci concert will close a series of three attractions which the Cowboy Band is bringing to Abilene this school year. Creator's band will appear on January 11th and Princess Tsianna, an Indian singer, will be here on November 9th.

Creator's band is now playing at the pier at Atlantic City. It is conceded in the east, where it is known, to be the world's greatest band. It has 55 pieces and carries a harpist, a baritone and a soprano for solo work.

Tsianna is a full blooded Cherokee. She is now singing on a European tour but will return to America soon on a trans-continental tour.

All these programs will be given in the new Simmons auditorium which will be fitted out to seat 2,000, according to Sandefer.

"We expect the patronage and support of all west Texas," he said, in commenting on these three big attractions, especially on the Galli-Curci concert. We are paying her the highest price ever paid any individual artist ever appearing in West Texas."

Should We Commit Suicide

We all have many reasons and excuses for desiring to commit suicide. For instance take yourself. Three hundred and sixty-five times a year we have to spend five minutes looking at our, what some might call, face while we shave; three hundred and sixty five times a year we have to put on and take off our socks and garters; fifty two times each year we get all ready for our pajamas only to learn that our, what some might call, our helpmate has just put them in the wash and we have to go keepping through the house seeking another pair (to put beneath our pillow in case of an emergency); at least fifty times a year we have to answer the query, "How in the world can you write a fresh column every day?" At least twelve times a year someone tells us the city administration is crooked, the state administration is corrupt, the national administration is rotten; just as we begin to believe the conclusions of all the famous and great men in every branch of science, and everything points to the existence of a God, a California girl of 17 tells the world that anyone who believes in a God is suffering from a compound fracture of their reasoning ability; probably twelve times a year at our Kiwanis luncheon we are served carrots. Innumerable times redbugs bite us. Added to the foregoing we are told that the youth of the land is drinking more booze than ever before in the history of the world (and we are told where they are getting it); that the costume of the female of the species is approaching absolute nudity (and any one who has visited a bathing beach knows how horrible that would be), and that eventually insects are going to capture the world. But we are not even thinking of committing suicide; and if we saw death coming toward us we'd make a longer non-stop flight than Lindy ever thought of attempting. We want to stay in the world as long as it is brimming with love and friendship and little children and pumpkin pies and pink buttercups and has a Texas on the map. Anyone who has been hoping for our suicide had better pay us what they owe us and forget it.—Judd Lewis in Houston Post Dispatch.

Littlefield Memorial Dormitory Now In Use

Austin, Oct. 17.—Opening its doors for the first time this fall, the new Alice P. The building was provided for in the will of the late George W. Littlefield in honor of his wife.

State University Has Large Enrollment

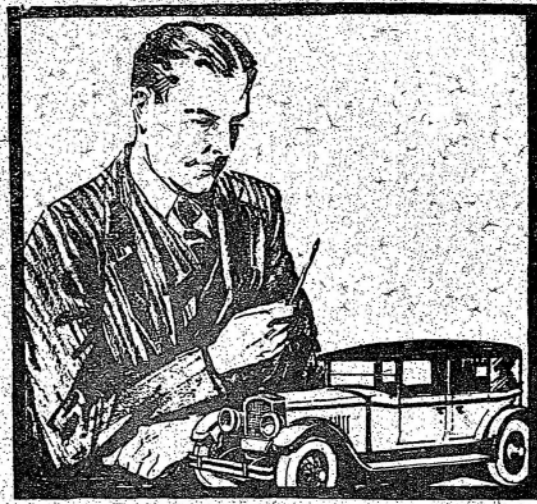

Austin, Oct. 16.—Enrollment for the long session of 1927-1928 at the University of Texas has reached 4,908, according to the latest available figures at the office of the University Auditor. There will probably be a few more students who will register late in the semester. The enrollment for all of last year totaled 5,148. During the first week of registration at the University this year there were 4,811 and for the same period last year there were 4,842.

"How best can I trade in my present car for a new car?"

WHEN you are ready to trade in your present car for a new car, you naturally want full value for your present car. But most of all you want full new car value.

It will therefore pay you to consider varying trade-in allowance offers in the light of these basic facts:

- 1 Your present car has only one fundamental basis of value: i.e., what the dealer who accepts it in trade can get for it in the used car market.
- 2 Your present car has seemingly different values because competitive dealers are bidding to sell you a new car.
- 3 The largest allowance offered is not necessarily the best deal for you. Sometimes it is; sometimes it is not.
- 4 An excessive allowance may mean that you are paying an excessive price for the new car in comparison with its real value.
- 5 First judge the merits of the new car in comparison with its price, including all delivery and finance charges. Then weigh any difference in allowance offered on your present car.
- 6 Remember that you are making a purchase—not a sale. You are buying a new car and simply using your present car as a credit against the new car's purchase price.

Charles W. Oakes, third son of N. R. and M. E. Oakes, was born Jan. 7, 1882 at Kossuth, Miss. When quite a youth he came with his parents to Texas, settling near Kemp, where he grew to manhood. In early young manhood he united with the Cumberland Presbyterian church. In 1906 the family moved to Santa Anna which has been his home since. He was married to Miss Jennie Boyd on Feb. 7th, 1920. One child blesses this union.

For the past four years he spent in retirement, seeking renewed health. Failing in his patient effort and heart's desire, he expressed a sincere wish to depart from earth with all it's pains and sorrow. At 6 p. m. October 14th Charles passed peacefully away.

Funeral services were conducted by his pastor assisted by Rev. Kirkpatrick, at the request of the deceased, after which the body was laid to rest in the Santa Anna cemetery October 15th.

A & M Dairy Herd Wins Prizes

College Station, Texas, Oct. 11—With an exhibit dairy herd of eighteen animals, the A & M College of Texas took a long string of prizes at the West Texas Fair at Abilene recently. Animals of the college herd were awarded two grand championships, one senior championship, four junior championships, and twelve first places. The college herd was first in amount of money won.

Winnings of A & M at the fair, as announced by A. L. Darnell of the dairy husbandry department of the college, were as follows:

Out of nine entries in Holsteins—six firsts, Junior champion bull, Senior champion cow, Junior champion cow, Grand champion bull and cow, also first on get of sire and produce of dam.

Out of six entries in Jerseys—first for Junior bull calf, second prize senior cow, first and second four-year-old cow, first and second Junior heifer calves, first prize calf, herd, first on produce of cow and Junior champion male and female.

This same herd will be exhibited at the State Fair of Texas at Dallas.

And Business Still Grows

An advertisement in the World Almanac of 1888 boasted that there were then 185 electric generating stations in the United States and that one million Edison lamps were in use. Today there are 6,000 generating stations in the country and one plant alone has capacity for lighting 3,200,000 fifty-watt lamps. In 1925 there were 263,000,000 lamps sold, more than 800,000 per day, or almost as many daily as the total number in use 47 years before.

International Debate at Simmons

Abilene, Oct. 10.—The first international debate ever held in west Texas is scheduled for November 18 when Simmons University of this city meets Cambridge University of England in the local school's auditorium. The date was recently closed when representatives of Simmons wired an acceptance, in answer to a letter proposing the contest.

The English team is composed of three men, who will be graduated at Cambridge in June. The Simmons team has not yet been chosen, said Prof. W. A. Stephenson, debating coach.

The question, selected by Simmons out of a list submitted, will be: That in the opinion of this House compulsory military training should be adopted as a part of the educational system in all schools and universities. Cambridge will take the negative side of the question.

The American tour is being arranged through the Institute of International Education, with headquarters at New York City. Last year the Englishmen toured the east and south and this year are going through the west and southwest.

Each team will be given 45 minutes for speaking with no rebuttals. The judging will probably be done by the English system which lets the audience decide the winner at the close of the debate.

Visits State Fair

The News editor spent the past week-end in Dallas, taking advantage of the opportunity to transact some business and to see the sights at the State Fair, Friday and Saturday were what we call Press Days, and several courtesies were shown the editors from over the state, and several hundred of them were there. We believe the Fair is bigger this year than ever before, the attractions and exhibits being different. A volume several times the size of the Santa Anna News could be written, telling of the sights, attractions, educational advantages and such like, and then only a shadow of the news given. Sunday was said to be a record day, the weather was fine and large crowds took advantage of the opportunity and attended the Fair.

Do we cheerfully do our work—Mary Lee Ford.

LAUGH

"Laughter, while it lasts, slackens and unbraces the mind, weakens the faculties, and causes a kind of remissness and dissipation in all powers of the soul; and thus far it must be looked upon as a weakness in the composition of human nature. But when one considers the frequent relief the human body receives from it, and how often it breaks the gloom, which is apt to depress the mind, and dampen the spirits, with transient, unexpected gleams of joy, one would take care not to grow too wise for so great a pleasure of life," is one of the rarest gems of wisdom that ever came from the pen of Joseph Addison, Englishman of letters.

These words from the seventeenth century are as true today as they were when Addison conceived them. Men and women in every walk of modern life recognize the value of laughter, how it smoothes life's pathway and lengthens it also.

Shakespeare said "Smile in man's faces, smooth, deceive and cog. But laughter exposes its own deception. The hearty laugh rings true. "Laugh and the world laughs with you," but seek to cover dark thoughts behind your laughter and the whole world knows it.

For health's sake let us not "grow too wise so great a pleasure" as at least one good laugh a day.

Miss Hallie Simpson who is teaching at San Angelo spent the week-end here with her parents.
