What the World Owes

To say "the world owes every man a living" and stop is falling short of a full statement of what the world really owes.

The world owes more than a mere living to the energetic and deserving, and absolutely nothing to the indolent and undeserving. To the workers of the world, whether with hands or heads, or hearts; to the just and sincere; to the honest and trustworthy; to the unselfish and the charitable; to the strong and the brave; to the law-abiding and the public spirited; to the humble and the true; to the daring and the virtuous; to the cheerful and the kind, to these the world owes heaping measures in return. These may expect their portions of world homage and tribute. These give without asking—receive without demanding.

To these the world owes more than a living, that is, more than sustenance, raiment and shelter. It owes them wages of love as well as of gold. It owes them honor, honest dealing, and debts paid. It owes them confidence and truth, strength and encouragement, justice, praise, sympathy, protection and happiness.

Every one of us thinks he is in the right class. He believes he is one who deserves a living and more from all or a part of the rest. Even the parasite always seeks to justify himself. The criminal always puts forward an excuse for his act, an alibi out of it. To criticize others is but to invite contention and argument.

If each one in his own mind asserts his necessity to the program of human development, to the cause of society, how may the sluggard be made to act and the wrong-doer to see the error of his ways? Who is wrong, or how can anyone be in error when his own judgment is supreme within its own realm?

To continue the theme would be repetition, but there is a correct answer to every question. Occasionally some genius makes a statement of truth. We can arrive at the solution of all problems by right thinking. It would be a bold, but logical, thing to do, if each one of us would ask ourselves these questions: Do I contribute anything to mankind; to health, prosperity, happiness, peace, comfort, orderly government, ambition, art, science, economy, education, religion, adventure, romance, or contentment? Again, in whatever humble position my lot may be cast, could the world go on as well without the things I produce or the service which I render? Am I even a fractional part of my community's progress or my nation's welfare?

Only by such measuring sticks can one arrive at a satisfactory answer. If, after a silent contemplation of our worth to those about us—to family, home, community, state, nation and the world at large, we find that we but live off of others without adding materially to the sum total of human welfare, and there is any good in us, we will get out of what we are doing or failing to do, and do something worthwhile. Then, and only then, does the world owe us anything.

A woman's tears will tarnish a man's brass.

THE LIVE TOWN

Some communities have a reputation far and wide as "live towns." Something is always doing there. And some places are commonly regarded as sleepy and dull places, and you almost never know of anything going on there. What constitutes the difference?

Even in the sleepy place, people have to do their daily work and they may work harder than they do in the live place. Their place of business may keep open longer hours. But they work along in the same rut year after year. If they have always had some unfavorable conditions, they are apt to regard the same as permanently necessary. They are slow to take up new ideas.

But in the live town, they are constantly moving to keep up with the times. If they discover that some of their school buildings are behind the times, they modernize or replace them. If they see the towns around adding parks and playgrounds, they provide the same for their own people. If they find the cities in their state having lecturers and concerts and clubs, they try out the same thing themselves. Their idea is to give their people the advantages they can expect elsewhere so far as that is humanly possible.

Improvements are always going ahead there. Business men are always putting up better buildings, or fixing up their old ones. Ugly things and eyesores are removed. The citizens are constantly improving their homes, and whenever there is any shortage of dwellings, someone comes forward with the capital to build some more.

Something doing all the time—that is the kind of thing we want in Santa Anna. If we can maintain this spirit of giving our people the advantages they can fairly expect in a community of this size, we shall be abundantly repaid for our effort.

Practicing Courtesy

Speaking well of another is not only good policy, it is a wonderful tonic. Moreover, it creates an atmosphere of cordiality, it removes distrust and soothes animosities, it is a social salve that heals many a wound received in the battle of life. It is good business, too, and it promotes a feeling that is at the foundation of united civic endeavor. In a town where there is constant criticism, where wrangling and backbiting are indulged in by any considerable number of persons, there is to be found little of the spirit that makes communities grow.

Bruce Barton tells of a man who made a practice of utilizing every opportunity for doing and saying courteous and considerable things. He declares that at least half of that man's millions were accumulated by courtesy and adds, "and it cost him nothing." That is quite true, the cost to him was nothing and while the return may have partaken of material profit the greater gain was in his own happiness—a spiritual dividend, worth more than all else besides.

Next to self-respect, based upon consciousness of a desire and effort to deal fairly with all men and to live aright, there are nothing so stimulating to the nobler ego than an attitude of constant liking for the good points of others, the unconscious searching out and recognition of such traits, the doing of little courtesies; the giving of consideration, the withholding of the spoken word or expression of the unkind thought that might wound if uttered, the daily practice of kindness that smooths the path of life for those with whom one comes in contact.

There is no lack of sincerity in such an attitude. It becomes a joy to those who possess it even through cultivation. And in civic life it is the force that counts in drawing men together, just as the opposite spirit of hatred by practicing or withholding that courtesy which is only recognition of another's rights.

KNOWING OUR LIMITS

A certain former professional baseball player, who had at one time gotten into the American and National league for at least a few games, was asked why he didn't "go on up." He unhesitatingly replied, "Well, I just wasn't good enough."

This man had known and played with such famous stars as Babe Ruth and Ty Cobb. He also had athletic records to his credit at high school. Yet he was truthful enough to admit that he "wasn't good enough."

A practical lesson can be learned from such an attitude. A lot of us have not the knowledge of our limits of endeavors nor the frankness to admit them. People go on blindly on, without stopping to analyze their situations. Pride of physical accomplishment has its counterpart in the egotism of mental proficiency. Often other pursuits might be more lucrative, or offer less physical and mental resistance; yet there are many people who fail to "find" themselves and enter the vocation of the task in which they might easily reach the top.

This brand of vanity is usually found in the professions. There have been lawyers who should have become ploughboys, doctors who should have studied music, artists who should have remained housewives, and poets who should have learned bookkeeping.

It is no disgrace to change one's life's calling. It is a mark of intelligence to admit that one has gone about as far in any line as he may reasonably expect, and an indication of common sense to change to the work for which one is best fitted. Success depends first upon analysis, then upon determination.

BLASE

Contrary to repeated reports the last horse and driver to be frightened by one of the fruits of modern inventive and industrial genius have not departed from this globe. A man whose horse ran away upon first looking upon a steam roller described the engine as "an unsightly iron monster, with a boiler, cab and a fire and fuel chamber, mounted upon large heavy rollers and emitting loud and unseemly noises in its operation."

With a little editing this man's description would have served admirably as the description of a country squire might have given twenty years ago of a "one-lung" automobile which had "raced" him in a cloud of dust at the terrific speed of eight miles an hour. Such incidents are provocative of much laughter and derision on the part of a generation which through constant association has learned to look upon the steam roller—and the automobile as commonplace objects.

People who have been reared in the cities and towns of the United States amidst every engine and device known to this ultra-mechanical civilization, can no more sympathize with the excitement and amazement experienced by those who see them for the first time than the prehistoric could sympathize with the feeling of awe which would pass over the modern urbanite if he were to encounter a real flesh and blood Dinosauria.

THE PAY ROLL

The pay roll (and pay) day are products of our modern industrialism. They did not exist when the human race was divided into slaves and masters, nor even during the period of hand craftsmen when workmen labored alone in their homes. Today both are commonplace.

Perhaps it is because it is so universal and commonplace that people never look upon the pay roll in its true light as the life blood of the community. To the home-town merchant's pay days have always been good business days, and yet those merchants received as a great discovery the idea that every day would be a good business day in the town or city whose industries were so numerous and diversified as to make every day a pay day.

Pay rolls mean business for merchants, taxes with which to run local governments, homes, schools, churches, charity, public improvements and public contentment. The more pay rolls the more of all of these community assets. And finally, and of still greater importance, pay rolls meant employment for the community's surplus labor and attractions which lure new workers and new families.

For these reasons progressive, growing communities offer inducements to new industries. Each new factory means another pay roll. The offers include free land, low taxes, cheap fuel or water, local capital, and even free use of buildings for limited periods.

Within certain limits, a growing population is beneficial to every community and what benefits the community as a whole serves each of its component parts.

The average man thinks the only thing that would live on his salary is a germ.

Reliable Electric Service a Big Aid to Our Progress

Electric Power is revolutionizing American industry. It is increasing manufacturing efficiency by jumps. It is transforming the American workman from a wage-slave to a mechanical expert. It is doing some of the hardest work on the farm. It is cooking, sweeping, washing, ironing and refrigerating for the housewife. It is lighting factories, stores, offices, homes and streets much better than they have ever been lighted before.

To give genuine satisfaction, electric power must be plentiful for all needs, uninterrupted in flow and priced fairly to the user. This calls for up-to-date equipment, top-notch maintenance, capable engineering, adequate capital and freedom from political interference.

Wherever it goes, this flow of electricity increases wealth, encourages industry, provides comforts, speeds progress, reduces drudgery and hardships.

Wherever it operates, this company provides better service at lower prices than its customers could provide for themselves, and it pays federal, state, county and city taxes.

R. Q. Lee, Candidate for Congress

R. Q. Lee of Cisco has definitely announced his candidacy for congress from the seventeenth district. This decision was reached by Mr. Lee this week after careful consideration and he is now preparing his platform and plans at an early date to announce his views.

Mr. Lee was reared on his father's farm in North Mississippi, coming to Texas with his father in 1886. After spending one year in school, he entered the employments of The W. H. Taylor Dry Goods Company of Fort Worth and worked for this company four years, advancing from a roustabout clerk to a department manager and director of the company.

Having heard the call of the West, it was in July, 1891 that he went to Caddo, Stephens county, twenty miles from a railroad, and opened a small general merchandise business. By hard work and rigid economy his business prospered from the beginning until he built up one of the largest inland mercantile businesses in Texas.

Having faith in the future of that section of West Texas, he invested his savings from his mercantile business in ranchland near the east line of Stephens county, stocking his pastures with a good grade of cattle.

His ranch adventure prospered as had his mercantile business. Mr. Lee served the Caddo section as school trustee, deacon in his

Buy From Local Stores

The housewife usually regards the peddler who comes to her door as a nuisance. But half the time she encourages him by the upside-down process of "buying something to get rid of him." She finds it easier, in the individual instance, to buy a package of bad needles or a rubber apron which turns out to be a second hand than it is to listen to a stream of talk and force herself to argument as to why she should not buy.

Yet if all the housewives of Santa Anna were to unite in refusal to buy of the itinerant salesman for a year, they would find themselves left, long before the year was out, in peace and quiet to attend to their home duties without interruption and to do their marketing according to their own good judgment.

In one prosperous small city often victimized by this type of person, the merchants got together and issued a statement which may well be heeded here:

"Numerous complaints are being received from housewives who report that they have lost money through purchasing merchandise from unknown house-to-house peddlers. Professional swindlers who go from city to city have victimized thousands of housewives. Merchandise is misrepresented and if delivered, is often inferior to samples shown. Advance payments are sometimes collected, the peddler vanishes and the merchandise is never received. Investigate before you buy or invest.

"Your responsible local merchants support all civic and public enterprises, pay taxes for the city's development and support, and give employment to thousands of home town people. You can always see them personally for the adjustment of any mistakes.

"You are safe in buying from responsible local stores."

A lot of men got the knack of putting up an aerial long before they found out how to string a clothesline.

Unquestionably the first anti-bob agitator in history was Samson.

The unemployment problem for many is how to keep that way.

KNOW TEXAS

One hundred and fifty-three new enterprises in Texas were granted charters in a single month recently. This is a sign of the time.

The Democratic national convention goes to Houston. A great many persons in the North and East now realize for the first time that Texas has cities large enough to entertain a national convention. Texas has the longest press news wire in the world. It reaches from Texarkana to El Paso and from Amarillo to Brownsville and is more than 2,400 miles long. It is operated by the Associated Press.

Texas is adapted to a wider range of wild animal life than any other state. The entire gulf area teems with wild ducks and wild geese and has been pronounced the best adapted section in the country for preserving bird life.

All wild birds, wild animals, and wild fowls are declared by law to be the property of the people of the state.

church and was known county wide as a wide awake, energetic community builder.

In 1923, Mr. Lee moved with his family to Cisco where he has since lived. He had not resided in Cisco long until he was elected school trustee, a bank director and still a little later president of the Cisco Banking Company and has served that institution as its president up to the present time.

When the oil boom came to Breckenridge in 1918, it found that county without a railroad. An effort was made to get one of the trunk line roads, operating in this section, to build a line to Breckenridge, but this did not seem to appeal to them.

It was then that the business men of Cisco drafted Mr. Lee to organize a company and build a line from Cisco to Breckenridge.

After some hesitation, Mr. Lee agreed to undertake the task and as a result he built one of the best short line railroads in the country.

He personally supervised the construction of this road and after its completion, operated it until the road was sold to the Texas & Pacific Railway Company in March, 1927.

Before selling the Cisco & Northeastern to the Texas & Pacific, Mr. Lee realizing that Throckmorton county had been trying for forty years to get a railroad, but for some reason had failed, then undertook to promote an extension of the Cisco & Northeastern from Breckenridge to Woodson and Throckmorton, a distance of forty miles.

He at once took maps of that splendid section to Washington and presented them to the Interstate Commerce Commission and with but little hesitation on the part of that tribunal he was granted a permit to build the extension and in his sale of the Cisco & Northeastern to the Texas & Pacific, that road agreed to carry out this contract.

This new line has been under construction since August, 1927 and will be completed to Woodson by March 1st and to Throckmorton by July 1st, 1928, in time to move the Throckmorton County grain crop this coming season.

Mr. Lee's friends think that one of the greatest works he has accomplished was his memorable diversification farming campaign in 1925 and 1926 while president of the West Texas Chamber of Commerce.

The good results of this effort are visible throughout West Texas today and the good he did can hardly be estimated. It should be said that he never presented an expense account to the West Texas Chamber of Commerce for any of his trips and that he paid his own traveling expenses during the campaign on many of them. He is now operating his model farm and demonstrating the practicability of the farming program advocated in this campaign.

Having spent the greater part of his life on the farm and in a country store, and having been a lifelong student of the agricultural needs of the South, he feels a keen interest in agriculture.

His many friends feel that there are few men in the country better fitted than he is to represent the seventeenth district in congress and that he can do a real constructive work, not only for West Texas but for the entire South.

His decision to offer for congress came only after he had been earnestly solicited by people from all over the district. His only desire to go to Washington is that he believes he can do some good work for the development of the country and he is beginning his campaign with the same earnestness which has characterized all his other activities.

Who Is Putting Up the Money?

Somebody is putting up money to fight for the liberty of the heast, Hickman. His attorney Walsh is riding back and forth from coast to coast hunting evidence to clear the kidnapper who cut the body of a little helpless girl to pieces. Who is interested enough to put up a lot of money we ask again?

California is a civilized state, and even so great a criminal as Hickman would have a fair trial.

Watch what Walsh does in the future, and there may be a clue to the source of money for this Hickman evidence. Hickman is to die April 27.

All is expensive in love and war.

The Migratory Instinct

That ancient and world-wide sun god, one of whose names survives for the comfort of makers of crossword puzzles, has had another honor from modern science. The sun is responsible, it appears, for that mystery which has kept so many scientists aware at nights, the mystery of migrating birds. To follow the swallow is not difficult, but what does the swallow follow?

What man calls weather is no key to the secret, for the migrations proceed relatively undisturbed in cold winters as in warm. The true key lies in the number of hours of sunlight in the day, in the opinion of at least one naturalist.

The length of the day is a constant astronomical phenomenon quite unrelated to weather variations or to other accidental differences between years. And for experimental purposes man can lengthen or shorten the day unseasonably within a limited space. This has been done through artificial lighting and has proved quite conclusively that the variation in the length of the day controls the migratory impulse. This impulse may come from glands which have been observed to enlarge or shrink under some stimulus imparted by the hours of light.

Many laymen are not interested in a scientific reason why birds go South in winter and North in summer, but even they detect an interesting connection between mankind and the gland and light theory. That the seasons affect man's feelings is a commonplace with poets, if not with scientists. Is it improbable that some obscure stimulus of the lengthening days of spring is behind the wanderlust? Is there any connection between modern illumination and the fact that many, who formerly felt the lust for wandering only in the spring, now must resist it the whole year through if they cannot afford to submit to it?

ENTHUSIASM

Personality, good clothes, polished shoes, good looks and the gift of gab are undoubtedly aids in salesmanship, but none of them holds a candle to enthusiasm. He who lacks the others may still sell goods but no one ever made good as a salesman who lacked enthusiasm.

For enthusiasm is the sort of thing that makes you believe the costly cash register you sell is the prime requisite of business, that the automobile for which you are the agent is the best at any price, that your store offers the best quality at the lowest price, and that the town you are trying to sell to others is the best in the world.

It is the enthusiasm of the lawyer that convinces him his client and his cause are always right. It is the enthusiasm of the doctor that makes his diagnosis accurate and his treatment effective. It is the enthusiasm of the insurance man that persuades him he is doing a service to all he explains his policies to. And it is the enthusiasm of the service club member that convinces him he is in business to serve humanity first and himself afterward.

Enthusiasm is the thing that lets a man argue that white is black and get away with it. The enthusiast makes the best sales prospects as well as the sales people. Those easily rendered enthusiastic have no sales resistance because they instantly contract the contagious enthusiasm of the salesman.

Enthusiasm, like truth, admits of no compromise. It is a conviction of rightness. It radiates confidence in one's self and in one's business or product. Today more than ever before it is vital to success in any enterprise.

Politicians used to blow hot and cold. Now they blow wet and dry.

Sometimes a movie hero is one who sits through it.

Child Marriage

Children may be more mature mentally at any given age than they used to be. Their improved education and the many contacts they have with the world give them a wider knowledge of things. But they have not had much more practical experience, and their knowledge is of a theoretical nature. They are as capable of making serious mistakes as they ever were. Perhaps more so, because they do not take the advice of their parents as well as they used to.

At the age of 16, not many young people are fit to choose husband and wives. They are likely to make mistakes that in a cause them life-long regret. They are liable to the sudden fancies of "calf love," which would seem silly to them in a few years. They should wait until they have a little more insight into human nature.

Too many boys and girls are dreaming of the opposite sex, at an age when they should be kicking up their heels on the playgrounds. They think they are men and women, but at heart they are only children. The birds should stay in the nest until their wings are grown a little stronger.

Every girl is looking for a husband—both before and after marriage.

A headline says that a sunstroke is the basis of a hearin. If anyone can collect judgment from the sun, they will set a new record.

For County Commissioner

In briefly stating my candidacy before the voters of this commission precinct for the office of County Commissioner, I wish to mention the following:

I came to Coleman county 26 years ago, and have made this my home practically every since. I was originally a farmer, but for the past seven years I have devoted all my time to the building and maintaining of public roads, during which time I made a special study of the work. I am familiar with road work, especially bridges and culverts from the largest steel structures down to the smallest concrete structures, and feel that I can be of special service to the public by reason of experience in this line of work.

I believe a Commissioner, as a public servant, should devote all his time to the duties of the office, and when such things as bridges and culverts are needed to be built, I can select my help and superintend the construction at quite a saving to the county.

I believe in a uniform rendition of taxes, and will exert my efforts to see that property is taxed according to its value, regardless of ownership.

I solicit your support upon my own merits and pledge myself, if elected, to perform the duties of the office to the very best of my ability, with justice to all and special privileges to none.

Very respectfully
N. E. ATKINSON
Candidate or Commissioner Precinct No. 2, Coleman County.

Preacher Pounded

We take this method of expressing our thanks to the good people of Trickham for their generous "shower" of groceries which they deposited in our car during services at Trickham Sunday evening. Before the car was unloaded, its appearance was such as to remind one of a "young" grocery store.

Our hearts' desire and prayer is that our services with and for you may be acceptable at the end, as it has been in the beginning.

Rev. J. W. West and Family.

To The Taxpayers of Precinct No. 2 Coleman County, Texas

Ladies and Gentlemen:—

After a great deal of thought I have decided to offer myself as a candidate for Commissioner of this precinct. I am leaving this up to the taxpayers for them to decide. If I am their choice I promise you to serve you at all times and hope not to disappoint any one. A 11 favors shown me will be appreciated as I know that I must have your support to be elected. So I ask you sincerely to consider my announcement for this office. I am for good roads and better roads as our money will provide for. I thank you.

Yours Respt.,
B. A. MUNGER.
