WASHINGTON SNAPSHOTS

A Weekly News Letter From James Preston, of Washington.

If there ever was an object lesson for the American people the world crisis and Washington's plans for building up the nations' defenses offer one.

Fifty thousand airplanes, an army equipped with streamlined fighting material, a navy second to none—these are the goals Americans don't like war and don't like to spend money they haven't got. But all are agreed that the defense machine must be repaired.

The significant thing is that there is only one way to turn for the repair material. That is to American industry. Industry which has been under attack off and on for years now; industry which is still operating under new and unprecedented controls.

The Army and Navy may have the plans; Congress may appropriate the money. But only American industry can turn out the airplanes and guns and tanks and trucks and ammunition to make the plans effective.

Despite the handicaps under which it has been operating, industry has given public assurances that it will do its utmost. Airplane manufacturers, for example, already can produce twice as many planes as they could a year ago. And they are ready to increase the production swiftly.

Interesting are the Army and Navy demands for relaxation of existing laws which restrict industrial operation. Interesting, too, is the President's disclosure of plans for the government to advance or lend money for the construction of new plants.

Some legislators who are considering these proposals now begin to wonder how wise their past course has been.

They are asking themselves questions like these: If the existing restrictions are so heavy that they handicap and slow production of war materials, have not they also been heavy enough to retard the production of things we needed for normal, peace-time prosperity? If it is necessary for the government to advance money to build new plants, shouldn't something have been done years ago to encourage new plants to produce peace time goods?

These legislators see little basic difference in the production of a tank and an automobile. Removal of restrictions, they say, is being pushed by the government because the nation now needs new tanks in a hurry at low prices. Is it not therefore apparent, they ask, that the nation would have been better off if it had more automobiles at lower prices?

Interesting also, to many sojourners was a peculiar coincidence. Within an hour after the President asked Congress for a billion for defense and warned against "fifth column" activities, the Senate voted to take up a bill which many say would stimulate the fifth column.

This proposal, the so-called LaFollete civil liberties bill, would forbid these American manufacturers who are now called upon to produce national defense material, to defend themselves against fifth column penetrations into their plants. They would by this law be given a $10,000 fine and six months imprisonment if they attempted to find out whether their employees or prospective employees were Nazis or Communists.

The theory behind this is that a man's political and economic beliefs are his own business. But, many are now asking, is it his own business if he seeks to destroy our American form of dictatorship?

Thus Washington supplies another paradox: It calls upon manufacturers to build up national defense, but it thinks about forbidding them to protect the nation, themselves and their plants against sabotage and espionage.

A tremendous issue is arising in Washington to concern Americans who want to protect their country from any aggressor. It is this: Who shall guide America's rearmament?

Poet's Corner

The following little ditty, from "Caps and lower case" a printer brochure put out by Jagers-Chiles-Stovall of Dallas, is full of pathos brimming with bathos and very, very touching. Read it, become homesick and weep.

Spring has come.
Winter has went.
It was not did
By accident.
The birds have flew,
As you have saw,
And spring has come
To Arkansas.

Almost as touching, as that treatise on primal-day insectivore acclaimed the greatest little poem in existence. It is entitled:

SERVEL ELECTROLUX

What do OWNERS say about it
