Undoubtbeen largely molded by practical necessities. Use of the Congressional power to declare war, for examdifficult and has encouraged many ple, has fallen into abeyance because wars are no longer declared in advance. The Constitutional powr of the Commander in Chief has been exercised more often, because the need for armed international action has grown more acute. The long delays occasioned by the slowness of communications in the eighteenth century have given place to breathtaking rapidity in the tempo of history. Repelling aggression in Korea or Europe cannot wait upon Congressional debate. However, while the need for speed and the growth in the size and complexity of the armed forces have enlarged the area in which the powers of the Commander in Chief are to be wielded, the magnitude of present-day military operations and international policies requires a degree of Congressional support that was unnecessary in the days of the nineteenth century." That seems a very gracious concession to Congress. Congress no longer has any power to act. It is simply given the right to support the President after the President has acted.

acreage in Texas is to be cut another 10 per cent this year, and that excess acreage for oil is to be cancelled. "Under these conditions, plus a deduction of 20 dollars or more per ton, coming after a crop failure in 1951, the peanut farmer in my area is going to be in serious circumstances, and I want to do everything I possibly can to help him. In addition, I do not want to see his independence destroyed, but I fear that is fhat the proposals possible. now made by the Department of Agriculture,s Production and Mar keting Administration will do."

In his speech to the group meet ing in Washington and restated in his written communication to | the Department of Agriculture, Burleson said that he cerertainly would not support any kind of a program which was proving expensive to the taxpayers, but to place this sort of burden on the farmer was not the way to correct the program's weaknesses. More and more the State Department has assumed to do many in the field of trade, by an executive agreement known as the Gen-(GATT). It has insisted that the and lower tariffs, through reciprocal trade agreements, within constantly widening limits and without ments as important as those made and an unwillingness to submit any matter to Congress if it thinks it can possibly carry it through without such submission. It shows a complete distrust of the opinion of the people, unless carefully nursed by

State Department propaganda.

A Serious Issue

The matter was brought to an issue by the intervention of the President in the Korean War without Congressman Burleson remind even telling Congress what he was ed Agricultural oficials that the doing for several weeks. And it was brought still further to the fore by the proposal that we commit troops to an international army under the control of a council of 12 nations. I do not think that the American people have ever faced a more serious constitutional issue or one which in the end may present a greater threat > to their freedom. If the President has unlimited power to involve us in war, then I believe that the consensus of opinion is that war is more likely. History shows that when the people have the opportunity to speak they as a rule decide for peace if

On Jan. 4, 1951 President Truman. commenting on the Coudert resolution to bar him from sending more troops to Europe without the consent of Congress, said emphatically that he did not need the permission of Congress to take such action. On January 11, at a press interview, according to the Washington Post:

"Mr. Truman, whose right to send troops to Europe recently was challenged by Senator Taft, said he had the power to send them any place in the world. This, he said, had been repeatedly recognized by Congress and the Supreme Court.

"A reporter asked Mr. Truman in effect what would happen if Con-

He Has Wide Powers

Of course, the President has wide powers in foreign policy, but the framers of the Constitution provided expressly that only Congress could do certain things. Those powers are expressed in Section 8 of Article I. Of course, Congress is given the power, and the exclusive power-"To declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water.

"To raise and support armies, but no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer term than two years."

That reflects a certain and definite suspicion of a possible desire on the part of some President to set up a great permanent military force. Further powers of Congress as stated in Section 8:

"To provide and maintain a navy. "To make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces."

There are other powers, such as calling forth the militia and disciplining the militia.

Power to Make Treaties

The Constitution also provides that the President shall have the power to make treaties, but only by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, provided two thirds of the Senators present concur. The President's relationship to the armed forces is stated only in Section 2 of Article II of the Constitution:

"The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States . . ." There is one very definite limit after they have proved themselves as failing. We in the Congress who have the interest of the farmers at heart will do him an injustice if we make unfair and un reasonable demands. We can not sell over annd over a boondoggling proposition, and I do not want to try. In the case of the Government's peanut program, I am convinced it is a matter of administering it, and if we are to have a program at all, let it be fair to those whom it is supposed to benefit." Burleson said that experience should teach us something and it should have taught a better hand ling of this program, which should not now severely penalize the peanut farmer of Texas.

gress tried to the his hands by putting restrictions in the appropriation bills for the forces to be, sent to Europe.

Claimed Clear Authority

"That, said the President, was up to Congress. If they wanted to go to the country about it, he said, he would go with them-and he recalled that he licked them once." At the President's conference a week later, on January 18, according to the press:

"He repeated that his constitutional authority to send American forces to Europe to take up their positions in an integrated European army was clear and did not depend upon the consent of Congress. What he would be glad to have, he said in substance, was a Senate expression that affirmed his constitutional authority."

Furthermore, a document was

-and I think it is admitted by every responsible authority who has discussed the problem-on the President's power to send troops abroad: he cannot send troops abroad if the sending of such troops amounts to the making of war.

Most of the cases which have been cited as authority for the President sending troops abroad are cases where the use of our troops was limited to the protection of American citizens or of American property.

NEXT WEEK: Senator Tait tells why he believes the President exceeded his power when * he sent troops abroad to join the European army under General Eisenhower.
