SAYS LET CHILD USE LEFT HAND

NEW YORK, (INS)—A child who is born left-handed and is taught to use his right hand in place of it may easily develop behavior disorders. This is the warning of Dr. Ira S. Wile, of Mount Sinai Hospital, New York, given in an address before 800 members of the American Orthopsychiatric Association at their annual meeting here.

RATS CAUSE RIPT

BATT CREEK, Mich. (INS)—Women's inherent and alleged antipathy for mice and rats today had found expression in the court records here. Mrs. Mary Ogle, Batt Creek housewife, filed suit for divorce from her husband Charles T. Ogle, alleging that her mate's fondness for white rats disturbed the tranquility of their marital life.

Blind Student Class Leader

ATLANTA, March 10 (AP)—C. M. Witcher, a blind freshman in the engineering department at the Georgia School of Technology, today led all the 2,355 students at the institution in scholastic standing. Witcher's name was first of five students posted as making the coveted "A," meaning those whose average in grades was above 90. Living in total darkness, Witcher has to be led about the campus from one classroom to another. He works out his assignments by a touch system and uses a portable typewriter for transcription. In order to take an examination, the instructor reads the questions while Witcher jots them down in his own method and answers by means of his typewriter. Despite his handicap, his teachers say, Witcher is almost always first to finish a quiz.

KNEW WHAT TO DO

WINNETT, Conn. (INS)—Rolph Nichols, driver of a transportation company bus, knew exactly what to do when a young calf leaped from a truck and galloped toward what appeared to be the land of freedom. Nichols pushed his bus along side the animal and then gently turned it into a blind alley, driving the bus after it. Then he picked a rope out of his bus and tossed a noose accurately around the animal's neck.

How you feel in the morning tells the real story

THAT'S the time you should feel like whistling and singing. Your muscles should itch to tackle the day's work. Your mind should quickly solve the problem that baffled you the afternoon before. Don't let your health slip away so that a night's rest fails in its natural recuperative powers. When you awaken with a "dragged out" physical or mental feeling, heed those bad symptoms. That's the time you need a dependable tonic to help restore your old time energy. Try a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which is sold by druggists.

Boys And Girls Learn How To Set The Table Correctly And Table Etiquette

Dear Club Girls: During the week I have given table service demonstrations to most of the schools where there are clubs. Table service is not included in this year's plan of the work for club girls, but as I was not pleased with the results last year, and because it did reach the boys, or the girls, who are not doing club work, I made up my mind I would repeat the work this year, giving it to the entire school instead of only the club girls. The first club meeting this week was at Midway. That school is fortunate enough to have an auditorium large enough to accommodate all the pupils, so each teacher ushered her group of boys and girls into the room and seated them. The demonstration was given from the stage where every child could see. A small table, table cloth, napkin, chair, empty dishes and silverware were used for the demonstration. The table cloth was folded with three lengthwise folds all turning to the right side and no creases turning crosswise, creases turning out and some in side. The napkin was folded twice lengthwise care being taken that the outer edges were covered by the outer part when folded.

The plate knife, fork, spoon, cup glass and saucer were placed on the table for one cover. The dinner knife and fork were placed next to the plate, with the knife on the right with cutting edge toward the plate, and the fork on the left with the tines turned up, spoons on the right with bowls turned up and in such order that a person eating would start at the outside and come toward the plate. The glass was placed at the tip of the knife, and the cup and saucer at the right of the plate, with the handle of the cup turned toward the right, in a position easily handled. Table etiquette was discussed, after which the children were asked what they learned from the demonstration. The following answers were given along with many others.

"I learned to eat out of my plate with my fork instead of my knife or spoon."

"I learned to take my spoon out of my cup or ice tea glass when I drink, and not to drink out of my cup or glass, and not with my spoon, and not to cool hot drinks in my saucer."

"I learned to keep my knife across my plate when not in use, and to keep my fork in my plate, instead of on the table, resting on my plate."

"I learned to take radishes, celery, olives, pickles, and bread out of the dishes with my fingers, instead of my fork."

"The children asked questions which came to their minds. A large number of them set the table at home, and agreed to use the method used in the demonstration."

A similar demonstration is being given to the women's clubs this month.

Sincerely yours, LOUCLIE ALLGOOD.

Rechristening Submarines
FOR 20 YEARS submarines in the United States navy have been identified by numbers and letters which were to most of us meaningless and unintelligible. Now the navy has decided to rechristen them with deep sea titles such as Bonita, Bass, Barracuda.

The wonder of it is that this happy idea had not been thought of years ago. Submariner had no more personality than a telephone number or automobile license plate. And yet there was no valid reason why they could not have been as properly addressed as the battleships.

If a submarine instead of the Maine had been blown up in Santiago harbor, it is unlikely an expression like "Remember the V-6706" would long have survived in American history. Figures are so easy to forget!

Loyalty and Courage
LOYALTY IS rather a scarce commodity. But now and then there is an example of it that makes the rest of the doubtful world look around for someone in whom to trust again. Ellen Warner, 21, thought that Victor Laurie was taking her to the movies in New York the other night. The man paused along the way to work an impromptu robbery. The rope, up which he had climbed, broke and he tumbled to the ground in a crumpled, broken heap.

Ellen Warner didn't run away. She went for help and then she stayed with the man until he died. She knew that she would be included in the case, and she had one shoplifting charge against her name. But an inner sense of loyalty made her do the courageous thing in an unpleasant situation. It doesn't make any difference where the game is being played. There is something rather fine about those who stay to the end and are unafraid.

OPINIONS OF OTHERS

Suspended Sentence Law
Wichita Falls Times:
A BILL to further liberalize the application of the suspended sentence has been engrossed by the house at Austin. It provides that offenders against the dry law may be given suspended sentences, regardless of age. At present a defendant over 25 years of age, convicted of dry law violation, cannot claim the benefits of the suspended sentence act.

There is no good reason why a 35-year-old bootlegger should not have the same privilege as a 35-year-old burglar, so far as the suspended sentence is concerned. To that extent the proposed new law is a just one. But most of those who have watched the administration of the suspended sentence law feel that any changes that are made should be in the direction of greater strictness, rather than of greater liberality. There is little sentiment for outright repeal of the law. There is much sentiment for making it a more effective instrument of justice.

There is no very difference between a suspended sentence and an outright acquittal. The defendant whose sentence is suspended has not lost his citizenship, to be sure, but that loss rests lightly on many offenders. No effort is made to keep track of him, he is not required to report to court to give any further account of himself. As all peace officers know, he can and does change his name so that the record of former conviction becomes difficult to establish and thus can make for another suspended sentence if he is again indicted in some other county. In one case on record in this county a defendant had two suspended sentences in two other counties. He asked for another one here but officers were able to establish his identity.

The suspended sentence law is used in principle but sadly defective in its application. We have to see it made still more liberal.

THE CRIME IN THE DUTCH GARDEN

SYNOPSIS: Audrey Winford's admission to Jimmie Haswell that she and Dr. Netherton are engaged convinces him of Police Superintendent Richmond's error in blaming the physician for the murder of Annabelle Querdling. It has been the officer's theory that he had killed the spinster so as to share her fortune through marriage with Marjorie Blake, a niece. A missing will disinheriting Marjorie and her sister, Evelyn, in the event of marriage, may have been stolen to invalidate this threat. Audrey, urged by Haswell, questions Netherton concerning his mysterious meetings with Marjorie and a call on Captain Stirling, the letter on the murder night, but he refuses to tell and suggests that they engagement be put off. Audrey tells Jimmie she will seek the identity of the driver of a car, like Stirling's, seen near the house at the time.

Chapter 20
MARJORIE HESITATES
THAT car was seldom out of Jimmie's mind. From the local registration bureau he had learned that Captain Stirling and 16 others in the locality owned Morris two-seaters of the type seen near the grounds. Major Gresham owned one, but he said he had walked over on the night of the tragedy. The car might have come from a distance or, if a local one, possibly was used without its owner's knowledge.

Coming from a visit to Constable Roscoe, who had been tracking down these cars, Jimmie met Marjorie, who, rather to his surprise, crossed the road to speak to him. She was looking better and happier than when he had previously seen her, and he wondered what had caused the very noticeable change. She said that if Nancy Wade would drop in again and bring Donald and himself it would be kind. Jimmie promised to deliver the message. Then he said:

"No news, I suppose, of the vanished will?"
"No," said Marjorie, adding that he could not understand any worry over it, since Morgan had said that, even if signed, it would not be binding.
"If properly signed, it would not all be inoperative."
"Only the bit about us? And of course we are suspected." Her manner was almost gay. "Whom do you suspect, Mr. Haswell?"
Jimmie countered with a smile and she continued, "The police suspect everybody, don't they? Especially Bill Netherton and me if they only know—." Then she stopped abruptly and spoke more seriously. "Is all the talk about it going to do Bill any harm? My brother declares that in a little place like this things are never forgotten—even when they are untrue. Winnie is suspected too. I ought to say that he wrote to me before he came down here. He told me he was coming and he asked me to see that Aunt Annabelle was in a good temper."
"Have you seen his letter?"
"No, I didn't keep it."
Jimmie considered the question for a few moments. Such a letter would be further evidence that Vincent Blake had not made a secret visit to his aunt's abode, though it would not dispose of the possible theory of a plot between himself and one or both of his sisters. Nor would it dispose of the suggestion that he might have seen his aunt and quarreled with her.

Marjorie did not want to tell the superintendent of Vincent's letter, but told Jimmie that he might, although Vincent had told her that Richmond would ask why it had not been told before. Jimmie suggested that Vincent tell him.
"I don't think it matters much either way," Harwell commented. "But what did you think, when you found your aunt and Vincent did not appear?"
"You mean did I suspect Winnie? No, I did not. I had forgotten about him."
"And now? Yourself, your sister, your brother—knowing your aunt and all the circumstances of her life better than any one else could—can you make no suggestion that will help to solve the mystery?"

"But we ourselves are suspected." The more reason then to tell all you know."
After a slight hesitation she said, "We told about the letters but they never discovered who wrote them."
"Suppose the letters had nothing to do with it?"
"But why suppose it? I must leave suspicions to you and to the police."
"You spoke of the danger of harm resulting to Doctor Netherton. Have you done all you can to prevent that danger?"
"What do you mean?" she asked. "If you believe Dr. Netherton to be innocent, is there nothing you can tell that will help to establish his innocence? To clear his name from any taint of suspicion?"
The warm color flushed her cheeks. Bill is innocent, absolutely innocent. No one can prove anything else."
"I know I have no real right to interfere," Jimmie paused to let his words sink in, "although one of the parties concerned asked me to help them. We want, if possible, to punish the guilty, but most of all we want to save the innocent." She looked away from him, the old troubled look coming again into her eyes. "Do you not suppose," she whispered, "I would help you if I could?"
"Would you? Think it over. Miss Blake. Think over all it may mean to Bill—and others. Then, if there is anything—will you let me know?"

Once more she hesitated. When she spoke it was in a new mood—there was something of defiance in it. "You are wrong, Mr. Haswell. Altogether wrong. The whole thing is so great a mystery to me as it is to you. I hope you will discover who killed my aunt. I wish it as much as any one, and I am as thankful as any one for all you have done. But there is nothing I can do to help you."
As he walked toward the Wades home he considered what Marjorie had told him, but, more conjecturally, the thought of what she had not told him was uppermost as he greeted Nancy and gave her Marjorie's message. It was forthwith arranged that the little party from Farways should go over to Marrow Craig the following evening.

In the morning Jimmie played a round of golf with Nancy, meeting Evelyn and Lionel on the course. Evelyn repeated the invitation to the Wades and Jimmie for bridge that evening and passed on. In the distance was Captain Stirling and another man, the one-armed driver making some accurate long drives.

In the afternoon he went to see Roscoe and again met Superintendent Richmond, who seemed greatly discouraged. "The safe way to commit a murder is on impulse. Every plan you make is a source of danger. If a man hates another, there is murder in his heart. Suddenly the chance is all in offered and he takes it. That sort of crime is the most difficult to detect."
"Are you talking at large or with reference to the Querdling case?" asked Jimmie.
"To this case, of course. I am coming back to my first idea that the chauffeur did it. He was furger only, but very definite gain. Jimmie left him, still thinking what the night was to bring forth. (Copyright, 1930, J. B. Lippincott Co.)

Jimmie stumbles upon a tender love scene in the dusk of the garden as tomorrow's chapter unfolds, and finds it an important part.

HOW'S your HEALTH

By ROBBIN COONS
HOLLYWOOD—His recent descent from stardom to his former featured ranking finds Charles Rogers hoping for the best and thoroughly prepared for the worst.
In other words, he is hoping that as a featured player he can earn more meaty roles than were his lot as a star, but falling this he is prepared to leave the screen entirely and turn to the stage.
The lad who as "Buddy" Rogers came out of Olathe, Kan., to become the flappers' screen idol, is now at a critical point in his movie career, and he knows it.

Whatever the reason, his several starring pictures have failed to start expectations at the box-office. The change in his official status was a natural consequence.

BRANDED
If this change brings him better parts, even if smaller ones, in better stories, he will be glad for it, he says. He hopes he is through now with the "sweet boy" type of picture which has been his brand in the past.

Stamped in exploitation with such honored labels as "America's Boy Friend" and "The Darling of the Debs," Rogers scarcely has had a chance to live them down.

Vagaries of movie trends in the past three years have had a part in Buddy's disappointment. "Close Harmony," his first all-talking picture, was a musical, in which he realized his ambition not only to lead an orchestra but to play every instrument in it.

The studio put him in more musicals, because they were the rage and "Close Harmony" had made money. Buddy, for the time, was sitting on the top of the movie world. He began screen-singing too, in an untrained, weak but not wholly unpleasant voice.

TURN OF THE TIDE
Then musicals went by the boards, and Rogers returned to the usual light drama allotted him. None of the stories was above average, some were below, but as a star Buddy "takes the rap."
On music Rogers pins his hopes for an after-screen career. He has been taking singing lessons, and his voice has gained in strength, volume and tone.

He is continuing practice on the seven or eight instruments he plays, and is confident that, in the event he cannot get what he wants on the screen, he can go on the stage.
