SNOWFALL CONTRIBUTES TO A FINE SEASONING

2 1/2 Inches Here Heaviest Since November, '34

No one seems to have consulted the weather charts, but the "old timers" Monday beamed upon the snow draped terrain and declared that "we've got the best seasoning we've had in 25 years."

The snow, measured by the weather bureau here at 2 1/2 inches, was only the climax to a long series of ideal rains. Autumn rains, featuring a two week's soaking in November, and intermittent showers in December had left the county in fine shape for "putting up the land."

However happy the wheat farmers were over the snow and winter rains, their good cheer could not compare with that of cattlemen. Hard hit by drought since 1932, ranchers saw prospects for the first good pasturing in more than five years.

But the ranches have an underground seasoning they have not had for years. The ground, even on the high places, is "wet" as far as a post hole digger can pull dirt.

Farmers were impatient for planting time to come as the result of the midwinter moisture. With their lands broken, they were merely awaiting the time that they can plant without fear of losing seed to cold and too severe dust storms.

Snow was reported at Amarillo, Wichita Falls, Lubbock, Abilene, Borger, Fort Worth, Dallas, Coleman, Vernon, Big Spring, Denton and San Angelo.

Milder temperatures and rain were reported at San Antonio, Austin, Corsicana and Del Rio. Cloudy skies with a forecast for rain were reported at Palestine, Houston, Galveston and Brownsville. Heavy rains fell at Corpus Christi.

Reports of snow included: Wichita Falls, 2 1/2 inches, still falling, temperature 26; Borger, one inch, still falling; Denton, one inch, still falling, temperature 32; Lubbock, 1 7/8, sky overcast, temperature 28.

Maintains His Bank Records Are Private

McCraw's Former Law Partner Defies Committee

DALLAS, Feb. 21 (AP)—Tom C. Clark of Dallas, assistant United States attorney general and former law partner of State Attorney General William McCraw, once again challenged today the authority of the Texas senate investigating committee to look at his private bank records.

The committee, which came to Dallas for the announced purpose of resuming its inquiry into practices of Land Commissioner Wildman H. McDonald, had asked the Mercantile National bank here to furnish records on accounts of Clark and McCraw.

Bank officials said they did not know whether they would give them to the committee in view of a letter to them from Clark denying them blanket authority to do so.

The quarrel over the bank accounts and previous charges that one purpose of the investigation was to "unmask" McCraw prompted Sen. T. J. Holbrook of Galveston to make a long statement as chairman of the committee.

"I have had my fights and vicious fights with Jimmy Allred," he said. "I have no quarrel with McCraw. But if McCraw has been connected with anything not for the public good, the people should know it."

Allred and McCraw have been listed as possible opposing candidates in the governor's race. The committee was seeking an accounting of bank transactions of Clark and McCraw from Jan. 1, 1934, to the present. Robert E. Allen of Dallas, former district judge and attorney for Clark, said Clark had no objection to the committee obtaining deposit slips to which they were entitled but opposed prying into "purely personal and private matters."

Holbrook sharply criticized Clark for not complying with the investigators' request.

"I don't see why anyone should refuse to throw open his bank transactions," the senate dean said. "I have no objection to anyone looking at mine in Galveston."

"It is the public interest to find out whether persons associated with public affairs have made large sums of money. If Bill McCraw spent too much money in the attorney general's race four years ago, the people should know it."

Eight Escape Texas Jail

JAILED AT BEAUMONT Overpowered By Negro Group

BEAUMONT, Feb. 21 (AP)—Eight negro prisoners overpowered Jailer R. W. Whithead and fled the county prison early today. Two were recaptured soon afterward attempting to board a train in the Missouri Pacific yards.

The prisoners, several of them rated as desperate and one known to have been armed with a pistol, ganged the jailer at 5:30 a. m. when he took a mop and broom to their cell block for the morning cleanup, county officials said. Whithead was not injured.

A trusty carried word of the break to the engine room of the 14-story county building, from the jail of which today's was the first successful break, and police and county deputies were summoned.

CHAMBERLAIN ACTS SWIFTLY AFTER EDEN RESIGNS

Prime Minister Asserts That Rebuff Of Mussolini Would Be A Starting Point Toward War

LONDON, Feb. 21 (AP)—Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain, in an amazing verbal struggle with his retiring foreign secretary, Anthony Eden, told a turbulent house of commons today that Britain had agreed to start negotiations for a new Anglo-Italian understanding "immediately" in Rome.

Chamberlain declared that for Britain to rebuff Italy's desires for such conversations would bring relations to a point "at which ultimately war between us might become inevitable."

The prime minister accused Eden, whom critics charged he had sacrificed to satisfy Europe's dictators, of being "unfair" in implying that he (Chamberlain) had succumbed to Italian "now or never" threats.

Submitted to League Frequently interrupted by jeers from noisy opposition members, who cheered Eden's defense of his resignation last night, Chamberlain spoke for a solid hour.

He insisted he had informed the Italian ambassador, Count Dino Grandi, there could be no settlement without a solution of the Spanish problem and that any Anglo-Italian agreement would be submitted to the league of nations.

Denying there was any question at this stage of what the terms of an Anglo-Italian agreement would be, Chamberlain went on:

"What we are seeking to do is to get agreement throughout Europe which will give us peace. The peace of Europe must depend on the attitude of four major powers—Germany, Italy, France and ourselves."

Eden and Chamberlain spoke before a packed, intent house of commons, in an atmosphere made tense by events of the week-end—the breaking speech by Reichsfuehrer Hitler, the reichstag yesterday, the dramatic resignation of Eden and Chamberlain's rapid moves toward accord with Italy.

"Are we to allow these two pairs of nations to go on clamoring at one another across the frontiers and allowing the feeling of the two sides to become more embittered until at last the barriers are broken down and the conflict begins which many think would mark the end of civilization?"

"Or can we bring them to an understanding of one another's aims and objects and to such discussion that may lead to a final settlement?"

"If we can bring these four nations into friendly discussions and into a settlement of their differences we shall have saved the peace of Europe for a generation."

Eden spoke with his right fist dramatically clenched. He declared he had resigned rather than deal with Italy in the face of Premier Chamberlain's propaganda against Britain—"life throughout the world"—and II Duce's "glorification" of Italian victories in Spain.

"Agreements that are worth while are never made on the basis of threats," he cried.

Cheered repeatedly both from the labor benches and some sections of the government supporters, Eden declared frankly this was an occasion when "strictly political convictions must override all other considerations."

"No man can be the keeper of another man's conscience," he declared.

Before the momentous session of the commons opened, Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain, who accepted Eden's withdrawal from his government last night, held a surprise conference with II Duce's ambassador, Count Dino Grandi.

The determined prime minister in spite of world wide reverberations from what some of his critics called the sacrifice of Eden to Europe's dictators, went ahead full speed with his new cabinet-approved approach to Mussolini.

FRANCE VIEWS DEVELOPMENTS WITH ALARM

PARIS, Feb. 21 (AP)—Resignation of Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden aroused French fears today that Great Britain, in the face of Germany's aggressive tactics, was turning abruptly to a policy of conciliation with the fascist states.

Powerful elements of the people's front urged the French foreign minister to break away from the close democratic alliance with Great Britain, rather than follow such a lead.

Even before Eden resigned, Premier Camille Chautemps, Foreign Minister Yvon Delbos and other high French officials evinced anxiety lest British overtures to Italy take a course which the French government could not follow without risk of alienating its own socialist and communist supporters at home.

Chautemps called a council of ministers for tomorrow to study the foreign situation, thrown into turmoil by Chancellor Adolf Hitler's outspoken declarations in Berlin, and to approve France's augmented armaments appropriations.

The belief that the Franco-British alliance has been the strongest single factor in maintaining European peace made it appear certain, however, that the French government would do its utmost to keep its close relations with Great Britain.

Another Crisis. Why, That's What Fuehrer Hitler Thrives On

By the AP Feature Service

The sixth year of Adolf Hitler's rule in Germany has started with the crisis of the Reichswehr shake-up.

Whatever the result of this one crisis are old stuff to Der Fuehrer. His appointment January 30, 1933, by President Hindenburg shook a Europe apprehensive of his violent anti-Rad, anti-Jewish policies.

1933: Another crisis, and dozens of deaths in the blood purge of June 30, 1934.

By 1935 Hitler felt strong enough to flout the Versailles treaty by proclaiming Germany's rearmament.

Next year the Reichswehr under his orders reoccupied the demilitarized Rhineland.

In 1937 Hitler's anti-Communist campaign crystallized in a fascist axis with Italy and Japan.

Jim Corbett Picked To Lead Boxers' Hall Of Fame By Alan Gould

Jack Dempsey, Gene Tunney, Benny Leonard, Tex Rickard And Joe Gans Included In First Ten

By ALAN GOULD

NEW YORK (AP)—Boxing's "Hall of Fame" echoes with argument, most of which is quite impossible to settle. The many factors involved, for which few yardsticks of measurement or comparison are available, make any fistic honor roll a matter of conjecture. We have consulted the oracles, shadow-boxed with the Marquis of Queensbury era. Obviously, to go back to the old bare knuckle days, to compare Tom Sayers, Richard Heenan, John Morrisey, the great Bendigo and Jean Mace with the stalwarts of the gloved first period would merely invite further trouble.

Our research, therefore, has concentrated upon fistic history of the last half-century, with a bow of recognition only to two heroes who spanned the transitional period, John L. Sullivan and Jack McAuliffe.

Sullivan belongs close to the top, not because he was the last of the great bare-knuckle belligerents but because the Boston Strong Boy became an American legend. He linked the fugitive days of pugilism with the reform period. He became himself an advocate of piety and died a symbol of solid citizenship, far removed from but still best remembered for the days when he offered, from the stage, "to lick any man in the house."

McAuliffe, who recently joined Sullivan in Elistian's Valhalla, was the first of a great line of American lightweights. Their ranks

1. James J. Corbett
2. Robert Fitzsimmons
3. John L. Sullivan
4. Joe Gans
5. Jack Dempsey
6. Benny Leonard
7. George L. (Tex) Rickard
8. Gene Tunney
9. Jack McAuliffe
10. Sam Langford

alone challenge the heavyweight monopoly in "Hall of Fame" debate. McAuliffe retired undefeated in 1893 after nine years as undisputed lightweight champion. He met and conquered all challengers. Fitzsimmons' Case

Only after weighing the evidence carefully do we conclude that Gentleman Jim Corbett rates the No. 1 spot in our honor roll in preference to Ruby Robert Fitzsimmons. Strictly on the competitive side, we favor Fitz. He was middleweight champion (at 158 pounds) six years before he knocked out Corbett in 1897. He won the light-heavyweight title six years afterward. He was active in the ring for nearly 30 years, was 47 years old when he finally quit, and in every respect was a physical marvel as well as one of the greatest punchers of all time.

Corbett's original claim to fame rests, of course, upon his knockout of Sullivan in 1892—an exploit for which many an old Sullivan idolator never forgave him—but the one-time San Francisco bank clerk wielded great influence along two lines of fistic development.

By showing what clean living could do, Corbett helped raise standards of competition as well as conduct in pugilistic circles. His career not only helped lift the game from disreputable atmosphere but his boxing skill stimulated its scientific side.

Two Other "Successes"

Two other studies in fistic success, Jack Dempsey and Gene Tunney, are included in our list. No matter how you think they would have fared in combat with the immortal Big Three or, for that matter, with Jim Jeffries or Jack Johnson, they must be conceded to be the last of the "great heavyweights." Jack and Gene drew the two biggest gates in prize-fight history. Dempsey's purses aggregated nearly $3,000,000 from 1919 to 1927. Tunney collected the biggest individual end, $990,000, for the famous "battle of the long count" and retired a millionaire in 1928.

Both fought their way to the top by the hard route, Dempsey as a fiery youth with dynamite in either fist, Tunney as a ring student who took Corbett for his model.

The man who had most to do with helping Tunney and Dempsey to make ring history as well as fantastic profits—Tex Rickard—certainly belongs in our fistic "Hall of Fame." The old Klondike gambler began his career as a promoter in 1906, at Goldfield, Nev. He bid $101,000 for the Jeffries-Johnson heavyweight match, which he promoted at Reno in 1910. Coming east he took over the old Madison Square Garden, put boxing on its feet as a sporting business, and brought the "best people" back to the ring.

Never A Champion

Two great lightweights, Joe Gans and Benny Leonard, rate high on our honor list. Champion from 1901 to 1907, when he yielded to Battling Nelson and to the ravages of illness, Gans was a model of fistic skill. Leonard, who retired undefeated in 1924, came closest among all succeeding lightweights to the Gans standard. Benny outboxed and outfought a formidable class of rivals.

The fighter who rounds out our top ten, Sam Langford, never held a title but few will dispute the Boston "Tar Baby's" claim to greatness. He is considered by many competent judges the hardest hitter of all heavyweights, with the possible exception of Fitzsimmons. His career covered 21 years but he was in his prime in the days when Jack Johnson was a fugitive champion, and thereby a victim of the handicaps associated with the fistic fortunes or misfortunes of his race.

It is a commentary upon the decade since Tunney's retirement that not one comes close to a place on the honor roll, save perhaps for Jim Braddock, on the basis of courage alone. Max Schmeling dispensed the extravagant "Hall of Fame" mention, at least, belongs to Tommy Ryan and Mickey Walker, both of whom scaled welter and middleweight heights in widely separated eras; Packey McFarland, an uncrowned master of ringcraft in pre-war days; Mike and Tommy Gibbons; Terry McGovern, terror of the bantam and featherweight ranks in the early 1900's; George Dixon and Joe Walcott, two wonderful negro champions of the old days; and Tony Canzoneri, best of the modern little fellows, who topped feather and lightweight ranks before retirement.

"I cannot tell a lie," said the Advertisement

A precept every good advertisement knows is: "I cannot tell a lie—and get away with it." Even if it wanted to stretch the truth, just a teeny bit, that wouldn't be smart business. For, in that way, more people would discover the exaggeration, more people would be off that product or that store for life.

Advertisements, then, are essentially truthful. If not from moral scruples, then on a hard-boiled basis of good business practice.

Yes, you can trust the advertisements in this paper. Make it a daily habit to read them, along with the other news. They will save your time. Save your steps. Save the pressure on the family budget that must see you through until next pay-day.

TODAY AND TOMORROW

By Walter Lippmann... (Mr. Lippmann's column is published as an informational and news feature.)

ON PAYING THE PIPER AND REALLY GETTING THE TUNE

Congress is about to consider bills to carry out the plan for reorganizing the executive branch of the government. It will be remembered that the proposal was made by the president more than a year ago, shortly before he submitted the judicial bill.

Lippmann though committees of Congress and departmental officials have continued to work on it, only now will the matter come up for action in Congress. The scheme covers a great many controversial questions. But most certainly the most important is that involving the office of Comptroller General.

But more exactly, the question is how Congress can make it certain that the President and the officials under him will in fact do what Congress intends that they should do when it enacts a law.

As a matter of long historical experience, and in every day practice, the principal way that Congress controls the executive is by supplying the executive with the money which he must have to do anything at all.

But this power to control is not reality; Congress does not in fact have the money to spend. By saying how much money the executive may have and what he must spend it for, the people's representatives exercise their control over executive officials.

The question is how Congress is to find out whether the executive has actually done what Congress meant him to do. This question has troubled Congress for a long time, and shortly after the war there was set up the present office of Comptroller General.

Though the intention was excellent, the result was not. Congress got nothing out of the Comptroller except the illusion that it had a watchdog on guard.

Surely it must be clear that if Congress is to hold the executive truly accountable, it must receive independent reports on what has actually been done with the money. There must, as the accountants say, be an audit made by an agent of Congress.

Now unfortunately, the pending bills do not very clearly recognize the difference between the power to approve payments in advance and the power to audit them afterwards.

Hollywood

Sights And Sounds by ROBBIN COONS

HOLLYWOOD - Dopey, bright star in that animated constellation, 'Snow White And The Seven Dwarfs,' had his ups and downs just like any one else before film fame came to him.

In fact, Dopey's trial flights were mostly flukes. It took much grooming and revamping to bring out that personality which is winning him a niche in Hollywood's hall of immortals.

Nearly three years ago, Walt Disney's animators started work on Dopey, trying to give him the combined character of four comies: Harry Langdon, Stan Laurel, Buster Keaton and Harpo Marx.

DOPEY IN 1935 was no great shakes as a comedian but he had good stuff in him—the best qualities of four proved laugh-provokers.

EARLY IN 1936, Dopey was working in this garb and, trying his hand at pantomime. It was rough sledding, however. Animators said he wasn't 'cute' enough.

LATE IN 1936, Dopey was beginning to assume some of that elfin character which finally won him stardom. Still, he lacked that certain something.

DOPEY, THE STAR, is described around the studio as 'three heads high, with slant blue eyes, a pug nose, large ears that react to his moods, and misfit clothes that droop on his runty, imple body.' The audience adjective is 'adorable.'

EMPIRE FOR A LADY

Chapter 23 THE NEW GOVERNMENT

That audience with the Tanyalang rifles and the Dyak chiefs was the beginning of a series lasting many days. Upon that first night Clyde returned to his ship, leaving me in charge; but in a day or two he moved his personal things to the Ballingong compound, and set about his job with all the energy he possessed.

Though Robert Forrester was often too ill to leave the Avon, Christine, in spite of Clyde's violent objection, came to Ballingong every day. But I saw her only in a series of glimpses. Once, I remember, she received a delegation of wives of the native chiefs; and there was a tea ceremonial with a great deal of excited arm-waving by strange women dressed in Chinese silks of various conceivable colors.

Together with Christine, Clyde now thrashed out plans for the first things that he must do, and the first policies that he must attempt. Anthony Forrester would have been proud of his daughter then. I wondered if he ever knew how much Christine had benefited by the knowledge which had cost Forrester himself so many drudging years.

Out of their long arguments presently began to appear definite plans. The all-day audiences with the several hundred tribal panglans began to take shape and force. Clyde had a notion that the limits of Ballingong raj, very vague to Mantusen, could be claimed to include all the drainage basins of the Siderong and Palowit rivers—a handy natural bounding, dominating more than 100 miles of coast, with an inland depth that probably averaged between 70 and 90 miles.

He now hauled off and slammed the Dyaks with a decree that shook them to their very keelons. They were to lay down their arms and do some actual work! They must prepare to plant a greater quantity of rice than they had ever planted before. The rice production must be doubled over the previous season, and every paddy must be doubled, upon penalty of the rajah's rage.

We were at the last of June, and it was time to begin the clearings and burnings which in the Dyak method of agriculture are necessary every year as a prelude to the August and September plantings. The winter rains then bring in the rice, and if Clyde could swing his Dyaks, April would see the most abundant supply of food and the greatest carcasses of surplus rice that Ballingong had ever known.

There was great question, of course, as to how many would obey. Not only did they balance against us all custom, considerable religion, and the natural native resistance to effort. They even had a sensible reason: they hated to plant more than they absolutely had to have because any slack was always grabbed.

I began to see that they perhaps valued heads so highly because heads were the only thing the Malays did not take away from them. Clyde was trying to tell them that they would no longer be forced to sell anything they did not wish to sell, and each man could make his own price; but we could not tell if any of them believed us.

By the middle of the second week there had been four or five stealthy head murders under cover of the dark. There were likely to be more. Since they were no longer to be taken with a stubborn enemy, the tribes men began to get other ideas. Over to turn upon each other. Over to Clyde hung the very immediate necessity of getting the tribesmen out of there. What with all-day audiences, and all-night arguments, Clyde was working more than 20 hours a day.

He seemed to thrive upon it—he even found time for the beginning of vigorous projects. Work crews uprooted from the river the charred pilings of Mantusen's burnt palace. The logs were chained together and made into permanent movable booms, moored in such a way that the river could quickly be closed above and below. The temporary palace of the rajah, consisting of the Dyak longhouse to which Mantusen had fallen back, was being greatly enlarged, with walls and floors of plank which must be laboriously adzed by Dyak labor.

I rebuilt and heightened both inner and outer stockades, and strengthened them with buttresses so placed that our rifle fire could take an attack under enfilade. And I brought some of our ship's guns up the Siderong, and mounted them to command the river.

Ballingong, too, was taking on a new appearance. The population which had taken to the jungle at the outbreak of war now sifted back, until, at the end of two weeks, the town was once more infested by its usual swarming numbers. And the Chinese camp-gangs were once more overcrowded. I have no idea where those Chinese had been hiding out, but now the little white and red prayer-streamers began to flutter again from the still-legged Chinese shacks.

When not laying out fortifications I patrolled the town and the camps.

I was trying to learn the basic Dyak tongue that I needed. It seemed a hopeless task, because although their words were few, the way they are made up is very difficult for the white man's ear. Christine found time to help me, in odd moments between all her other chores.

Sitting On The Lid "Say 'pig' in Palowit." "They way you say it, it means egg. Say 'poo.'" "No, 'poo.'" "It's still an egg." (Despairing.)

I didn't want a pig anyway. I could even do without an egg. What I needed was a drink. Still, I was making a little progress; I could issue a few simple orders to the Tanyalang, and be understood and express disapproval in terms which were livelier than I then knew.

During the heavy flurry of activity, but in spite of the perpetual round of councils that marked our first days at Ballingong, I found time to amputate Grogan's leg.

By the third week the greater number of the tribes had been sent home—except for the Tanyalang; and if those interminable days of council had accomplished nothing more, this still was a handsome thing. The most dangerous gathering of Dyak tribes we had ever seen had been dispersed to their homes, confused and dubious perhaps, but certainly under our authority, and the serious threat that their very presence implied was lifted from us for the time being.

We had launched our new government; and though it was only a makeshift—not even a well-articulated skeleton of a government—we thought we had done everything we could do. Mantusen was out, and we were in. Our tenure rested upon a very shaky military advantage, and a still more doubtful document in Arabic; but we could not very well have expected anything better.

For the present we could do little more than sit on the lid, hoping that the first outbreak against our authority would end in such crushing punishment for the rebels as to establish our position. Winning the genuine confidence of the Dyaks could not be hurried; but every week, even every day that passed, was an advantage to us now.

But though the tenor of our activity changed, it brought us none of the interval of quiet for which we had hoped. As soon as the tall feathers upon the jacket of the last monkey-faced pangiran had disappeared around the head, Clyde made opportunity to establish his first court of justice; and this institution had not gone far when the vast complexity of his task began to be plain.

Numbered in thousands, the population of the raj of Ballingong was not large—very sparse in fact, judged by the size of the territory. But it was not only split into many separate communities, most of them hostile to each other, so individualistic were these people that every family sometimes had to be dealt with separately.

Every day, now, Clyde spent from four to 10 hours in the rust of his rebuilt "palace," listening to a vast variety of petitions and complaints. It was an all but intolerable nuisance that some Dyak representation should always be at him, but in another way it was the most encouraging sign that we had.

The Dyaks do not bring petitions and complaints to Malays, whom they fear worse than anything that can happen to them among themselves.

The Red river, highest since 1908, receded three feet at Hugo where it drove approximately 500 river bottom dwellers from their homes.

Weather Delays Tree Shipment Snow which covered the West Texas plains area forestalled the delivery of 468 additional Chinese elm trees here for distribution by the chamber of commerce. The nursery furnishing the trees said that it would be impossible to dig the plants before the latter part of the week. Meanwhile, the 126 trees on the ground here are all covered by orders so that there will not be any surplus trees to sell until possibly Saturday.

Allred today asserted opposition to a congressional resolution which would authorize the U. S. attorney general's department to take steps to protect federal rights to submerged lands along its coast. The governor said he was considering going to Washington to attend a hearing Wednesday before the national house judiciary committee and oppose the resolution authored by Senator Nye of North Dakota, which already has passed the senate. Bitter Fighting in Teruel Area HENDAYTE, France, Feb. 21 (AP)—Fighting raged in the heart of Teruel today and government defenders were reported surrendering in small groups as insurgent assault forces battled to regain full possession of the strategic south Aragon city. While the desperate government garrison was being pounded into submission, another insurgent force launched a new offensive against the Sagunto highway, advancing five miles southeast of Teruel. It appeared that General Francisco Franco's army intended driving as far as possible toward the Mediterranean. A destructive artillery and airplane bombardment preceded this advance. Insurgent troops, following up the barrage, were said to have penetrated government lines and forced government troops to retreat on both sides of the important road, which leads to the sea.

Bank Night Legal? Legal Guessing CHICAGO, Feb. 21 (AP)—"Bank night" at the movies still has the nation guessing—about its legality. The prize drawing plan mushroomed from its origin in Denver, Colo., several years ago into an issue for state courts and legislature almost as big as its power to pull patrons into theaters. "Bank night" came back into the news last week when the Nebraska supreme court definitely outlawed it by refusing a rehearing. Twelve other states have prohibited it by action of courts or attorneys general which held "bank night" violated gambling or lottery laws, an Associated Press survey showed. They were Missouri, Kansas, Vermont, Texas, Idaho, Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, South Carolina, Virginia, Kentucky and Illinois. Eight states have held "bank night" legal—New Mexico, Oklahoma, Iowa, California, N. S. W. Hampshire, Tennessee, Arkansas and Rhode Island.

CRUDE OIL DEMAND WASHINGTON, Feb. 21 (AP)—The bureau of mines estimated today a daily average supply of 1,351,600 barrels would be needed to meet the nation's domestic crude oil demand next month. The estimate was 46,800 barrels less than that for February and 51,100 less than the daily production a year ago. It was, however, about 5 percent higher than the actual demand for domestic crude oil in March, 1937. The bureau estimated domestic motor fuel demand at 40,680,000 barrels for March or about 1-4 of 1 percent higher than the demand in the same month a year ago. The bureau said daily crude oil production during the four weeks, January 1 to 29, averaged about 3,447,000 barrels.

FILM STARS LEFT OUT OF BLUE BOOK HOLLYWOOD, Feb. 21 (AP)—Filmland elite, who crash page 1 of the newspapers with monotonous regularity, thumbed vainly through a new social register of Southern California today for mention of their names. The 1938 edition of the Southwest Blue Book, like its predecessors gives most of the brightest stars of Hollywood the cold shoulder. On the 467 pages of the book are found few names of families known to movie fans. The Barrymores, the Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, Claudette Colbert, Clark Gable and Robert Taylor were left out. Best-known families to make the list were Harold Lloyd's, late Will Rogers', Cecil B. DeMille and John G. Blystone.
