PROGRESS. Progressive men and municipalities never look backward except to reflect and profit by mistakes they have made.

The newspaper of a town reflects the progressive spirit of its merchants. The newspaper is the greatest public spirited institution in the world.

Parents usually want a write-up when an addition comes to the family, and then a write-up again when the grim reaper appears in the home.

The newspaper should and usually does reflect the growth of the town. Every great movement of modern times has been put over by the press.

Nothing seems to surprise a real fisherman more than catching a fish.

Bulldogs Boot Game Away To The Buckaroos

"The game's never over till the last man is out." That grand old saying about the national pastime was proved yesterday at Nitro Park to the sorrow of the Ranger Bulldogs and to the joy of the Breckenridge Buckaroos. The visitors went into the eighth inning three runs behind and, after making one run that frame, came back with a ninth inning rally that netted three scores and a 7-6 victory over the Ranger High School lads.

The Bulldogs should have won the game. They made twelve hits, including a home run and a pair of two baggers, while Breckenridge made only six hits, one of them for two bases. Taylor, the Ranger hurler, whiffed eight while Harrison and Henson for the Buckaroos fanned only five. The thing that won for Breckenridge was the refusal to give up, combined with a let-down on the part of Ranger after an apparently safe lead had been obtained.

Swofford, the husky Bulldog shortstop, crashed the first ball pitched in the second inning over the right field wall for a home run—the first score of the game. Shipp followed with a single, Killingsworth laid one down and beat it out. Both runners advanced on a passed ball, Phillips fled out to short. Taylor was out, second to first, Shipp scoring. E. Glenn was safe when the shortstop let his grounder get by and Killingsworth crossed the plate. Knight singled. Bert Harrison, the Buckaroo pitching ace, was taken out of the box and Henson went in. A. Glenn ended the inning by an infield out.

With the count 3-0, Breckenridge made it almost even by getting two runs in the third on a base on balls, two errors and a sacrifice fly. Buster Mills, in Ranger's half of the third, singled, stole second, took third when the shortstop failed to hold the catcher's throw and scored on an infield out. The visitors made a tally in the fifth when Stearns doubled and scored on an error. The Bulldogs made a run in their half, however, on A. Glenn's double and Mills' single. Then in the sixth, Ranger further increased its lead when, with two down, Taylor doubled to right and scored when E. Glenn's hot grounder got away from the second baseman.

The count stood 6 to 3 in favor of Ranger as the eighth inning opened. But a single by Harbin Harrison, a stolen base, an error and a single by Henson netted a run. Ranger failed to score in the last half of the eighth though Killingsworth led off with a walk, Phillips sacrificed, Taylor grounded to the pitcher and Killingsworth was run down between second and third. Taylor stole second and E. Glenn singled but Knight went down swinging and the inning was over.

Jim Zarafonitis singled to open the last inning for Breckenridge. Beetle singled. Then three errors in succession gave the visitors three scores and the lead, 7-6. For Ranger, Swofford singled with two out and stole second but Shipp lined out to shortstop and the game was over.

Russo-Jap War For Control Of Far East Predicted

LONDON, April 16.—A Russian-Japanese war for the control of the Far East is "perhaps inevitable" in the opinion of Marshal Chang Tse Lin, Manchurian dictator and moving spirit of the revolutionary wars in China in the past few months, according to a dispatch printed in the Evening News here.

"Anyhow," Chang was quoted, "Bolshevism can not be tolerated in Manchuria," which, observers pointed out, might be construed to mean a Manchurian-Japanese alliance in event of the fulfillment of the dictator's prediction.

WHOFUS HIFFLETREE'S OOZY ONDERINGS

The chances of the Ranger Bulldogs to win the county championship in baseball took a decided slump yesterday when they allowed the Breckenridge Buckaroos to win.

However, the Bulldogs could have won the game if they had kept up the dash of the early innings. Their fielding, too, was atrocious, except in spots.

Also, the Bulldogs accomplished something that the Lobos failed to do by knocking Bert Harrison, Buckaroo pitching star, out of the box in the second inning.

If Ranger polishes up on fielding and keeps up the old fighting spirit, the Bulldogs will have a chance when they tackle Cisco for the county title.

Let's have the biggest opening day crowd this season ever saw when the Eastland Tigers invade Ranger Sunday to open the Oil Belt League season.

Going down to Stephenville tomorrow for the district track meet? For the first time in history, Ranger has a good chance to win the meet.

Joe Pate, the former Fort Worth star, made his big league debut yesterday by relieving Baumgartner after the latter had allowed three runs and held the Washington Senators scoreless the remaining six innings Philadelphia winning 9 to 3.

Managers Now Out Seeking For Big Sensations

By HENRY L. FARRELL, United Press Sports Editor. NEW YORK, April 16.—Several years ago a popular and capable boxing manager was prospering with a string of little fellows.

This manager began to neglect his business and surround himself with a lot of bum heavyweights. He spent more time scouting around the country trying to find or build up prospects than he did at his desk getting matches for his bread-winners and gradually they all drifted away from him.

"The big dough is in a new sensation, preferably a heavyweight," he said in explanation. "The fellows in the money now are not champions. The public knows it and the public is tired of them. What I want is a Dempsey to bring out from nowhere and knock 'em all over with a punch. Some place there's an unknown who can lick Dempsey and I want to find him."

He didn't find the unknown and he's broke now. He figures that his logic was sound but his luck poor and some other fellow will succeed where he failed.

There is a lot of good business sense in the theory that the public will respond to an unknown who jumps into the big shots so quickly that everyone asks "Who is that bird? Where did he come from?" And it is mostly luck in finding a fighter of the type.

Jimmy Johnston once told Jess Willard to get out of his office and that he had no time to bother with a big, unknown man, and Willard got out and took with him a million dollars from Johnston's palm.

Just a few months ago, a husky youngster approached Eddie Kane in Chicago and said he was looking for a manager.

"What's your name?" Kane asked. "Shuffle Callahan," he answered. "How'd you get that Callahan?" "It comes from my mother's name," he said. "I'm Irish but I don't like my front name, it's vulgar and that don't sound like a fighter."

He told Kane that he had been rail-roading for three years since he had been forced to leave school and that he had been through a few minor bouts. He was born in Elizabeth, N. J., in 1904 and he has turned out to be another great welterweight from the neighborhood that produced Mickey Walker and Georgie Ward.

In a short time this Callahan has become one of the best prospects in the game and a potential welterweight champion. In his first important fight he knocked out Teddy Gartin, Denver, in six rounds. Then he stopped Johnny Mendelson, Milwaukee, in three rounds, Morris Schlaiffer, in two rounds and Bobby Barrett, Philadelphia, in two minutes of the first round.

He is a southpaw hitter and has shown that he can take it. As a business prospect he is one of the best in the ring today as he is willing to take any kind of a match. The other good cards in the welterweight and other divisions want all the money in the mint and soft spots and they have sliced the entire division.

Callahan is fortunate in being in a division that is sadly in need of new faces and in a class that hasn't a great little fighter and is still a good one but he seems to have other interests than boxing now and real champions have to stick to their jobs, if they are to last.

The real contenders for Walker's title are pretty well pounded out and there is a great future from a financial standpoint at least for a punching fighter with some personality. Callahan seems to be patterned after that time and he has a catching name that will take easily. Callahan will be in the same stable with Sammy Mandell, Tex Rickard's choice, as the best lightweight of 1925, and if he works much with Mandell he ought to polish off what rough spots he may have in his technique but a puncher who can hit like he can doesn't need much moxing skill.

BEGIN HERE TODAY
 At the opening of the story today, AUDREY MORTON has just seen her guardian, HARRY MORTON, with whom she is in love enter the Bon cabaret at midnight with a gay party of women. She has asked JOHN PARRISH, Morton's secretary to take her there, having overheard Morton make an appointment for the place.

Morton has tried to interest her in Parrish. He also has tried to disgust her with him by a violent flirtation with NONA, a Scranton stage girl, who is in love with him.

Morton has been a mystery to the gossips of Crofton for 15 years, since he first went there with Audrey, then a little child. Rich, handsome, unmarried, he maintains a home in Crofton and a costly apartment in Scranton, dividing his time between them. His business and his past are unknown to his friends and neighbors.

Audrey offers Parrish the money for their meal.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY
 (The names and situations in this story are fictitious.)

CHAPTER XVII

Audrey lifted the little silk and velvet bag that she had brought on her arm, drew from it a fifty dollar bill, and passed it to her escort. He did this without once taking her eyes from Morton, on the other side of the room.

Parrish caught the direction of her glance, and with a quick look, settled back in his seat.

"Hadn't we better go?" he asked, leaning over toward her.

She made a negative motion of her head. "I want to stay," she told him.

The manager of the restaurant himself was escorting Morton and his party to a table, that stood directly alongside the dance floor. Removing the sign "RESERVED" from a bouquet of flowers that stood in the middle of the cloth, the manager pulled out Morton's chair for him. Morton waited until the girls in his party were seated, and then gave a rapid order to the restaurant man.

Audrey, watching saw one of the liquor agents in the corner of the room disappear, and promptly returned with a waiter brought to Morton's table a tray of after-dinner coffee cups. Morton, bowing to his party, lifted his own cup, as if pledging his companions.

"I bet they're drinking whiskey," surmised Parrish.

"Cocktails," said Audrey, briefly.

Parrish looked at her with interest. "How can you tell?"

"Daddy has never taken me to any of these places, but he has told me about them," she said. "They always serve cocktails in those little coffee cups. That's so nobody can see what's in them."

The girls who were with Morton were strangers to Audrey, but the other male member of the party was the man who had spoken to Morton in front of the art store, the day before.

Paying almost no heed to Parrish, she continued to watch Morton's table. The waiter brought her dish after dish, each of which she pushed away. Parrish was making a good meal out of the small portions that were set before him.

"Don't you want to eat anything?" he asked her.

"I think not," she said. "I may take some coffee."

In Morton's group the conversation was becoming lively. Two more

"I think she retired rather late last night."

His breakfast finished, he picked up one of the papers that lay beside his plate, and glanced over the headlines. Then he turned to the market reports, and ran his eye down the columns of fine print. Evidently finding nothing to interest him, he rang for the butler.

"Never mind that message to my office," he said. "Telephone Parrish to come over here, right away."

He sauntered into the drawing room, and stood looking out the window, at the busy street below. It was turning spring, and the garments of the girl office workers, hurrying lest they be late, were brighter in color than for some months past.

Morton watched the morning procession for a while, and then turned to the pipe-organ, back in the dark alcove. Switching on the electric lamp, he detached the self-player mechanism, and began fingering the keys softly.

He was still playing when Parrish was announced, an hour later.

Parrish's manner was stiff, as he entered the room. He did not give his hat into the outstretched hand of the butler, but remained standing at attention. There was much disfavor in his eye as he looked at his employer.

"Give him your hat and coat, Morton told him, still moving his hands over the keys.

Reluctantly Parrish obeyed, and obeyed Morton's motion toward a chair.

Morton repeated the message for his Crofton office that he had given to the butler earlier, and Parrish made note of it.

"Is that all, sir?" he asked.

Morton thoughtfully strolled across the room, and seated himself on the edge of the table, beside which Parrish sat.

"I'm going to be engaged this afternoon and this evening," Morton said. "Will it be too much trouble for you to take Miss Morton out any place that she desires to go?"

"No, sir," Parrish said, sitting erect and rigid, with his eyes averted from Morton.

"In that case," said his employer, "I suggest you call her on the telephone about noon, and ask her if she would not like to go for a ride

"Cocktails," said Audrey, briefly. Parrish looked at her with interest. "How can you tell?"

The strange man reached across the head of one of the girls, then at the waiter, who had not touched Morton on the back.

"How much should I give him?" he asked the girl.

"About two dollars, I think," she said.

Reluctantly, he took back the coin, and laid two dollars in bills on the table. The waiter, without a change of countenance, nodded, and thanked the girl.

Together they wound their way through the tables, and to the door. Audrey watched Morton as she passed through the room, but he was talking intently to the ruddy girl, and did not lift his eyes.

Morton was stabbing at a grapefruit at breakfast next morning, when the butler brought in a telegram.

Morton glanced over it.

"When my office opens, please call up Parrish, there, and tell him to wire my office in Crofton that I won't be back for about a week," he directed. "Tell them to take care of any business matters that come up as they see fit. They know what to do."

The butler bowed. Morton finished his grapefruit, and turned to the large platter of bacon and fried eggs that was set before him.

"Has Miss Morton been downstairs this morning?" he asked.

"No, sir," the butler said. "Shall I inquire, sir?"

"No—never mind," said Morton.

Rising, he helped her to don her fur coat, and motioned to the waiter to come. He stood patiently until the man returned with his change. Laying a half-dollar beside his plate, he was starting out, but Audrey stopped him.

"I think he expects more than that," she suggested.

trays, with the little cups, had been brought. One girl, who was sitting at Morton's right was laughing almost continuously.

The girl was ruddy—whether artificially or naturally, Audrey could not tell at that distance. Her hair was a rich dark red, and her cheeks were blooming. She had the round face of a child, and a child's round, inquiring eyes. Her arms and shoulders were bare, and on her left wrist was a long platinum chain, wound around and around to serve as a bracelet.

As Audrey watched, the girl upset a tall glass that the waiter placed before her. She giggled hysterically, and drew back, as the waiter sopped up the liquid with napkins snatched from an adjoining table. When she pulled her chair close again, she turned to Morton as if apologizing. Leaning nearer and nearer to him, her arm stole over the back of his chair, and finally over his shoulder.

He merely looked amused.

"Let's go," again proposed Parrish, who had not lost any of the details of this scene.

Audrey apparently did not hear him. Her eyes were fixed on the man and girl across the room. Her jaw was set a little forward, as if she were filled with some deep resolution.

Morton turned his head and whispered in the girl's ear. She laughed delightedly, and turning to her companions, apparently repeated what Morton had said. They all

OPERATION AVOIDED!

Vian, Okla.—"I had pains in my left side and couldn't get a long breath. I had palpitation, was constipated, nervous, sick to my stomach—everything was wrong. One doctor told me I would have to be operated. My husband said, 'I know Dr. Pierce's medicine helped you before so I am going to get it again.' He got me some of the 'Prescription' and 'Golden Medical Discovery' and one vial of the Pleasant Pellets, and today I can wash, keep house for seven in the family and hoe the garden.
