THIS HAS HAPPENED

Valerie West, pretty and charming—and hard trails—is engaged to Tad Thorne, adored brother of Sybil Thorne, notoriously lovely and indiscreet Sybil, a Boston society girl who has had plenty of affairs of her own, distrusts Valerie from the beginning, and is fearful for her happiness.

A few days before the wedding Tad finds Valerie with a monocled Englishman, buys a diamond ring. She introduces him as Lord Montford and to Tad that the beautiful dinner she exhibits proudly is a wedding gift from her lordship. Fully Tad orders his fiancée to turn the ring. Lord Montford revenges, and Val begins to argue.

Now go on with the story:
CHAPTER VIII

Slowly Valerie ped the ring from her finger.

"Here, Monty," said "Tad's right. Thank you the same." She took Tad's.

"You know, Mr. I'm crazy about diamonds. It's crazy about this big boy. And he's an awful bad actor."

Valerie was in a delicate situation with her Tad thought he had never seen so adorable before. She extol her slim telling everyone, "I haven't lost a son. I've gained a daughter."

But her cheer was all assumed. For the wedding she had discarded her heavy black, and worn a gown of lavender georgette. The following week she would be quite conscious stricken about it, fearing that people might talk. Sybil had clung stubbornly to black, because she knew that Valerie disliked the idea.

Her dress was of black satin, swathed about her lithe figure, and her skirt was draped and caught at the hip. She wore a large black milan, faced with flesh georgette, and pink pearls that Craig had given her.

Some people said she was lovelier than the bride. Craig thought her infinitely more beautiful.

Sybil had been dreadfully discontented that Spring. But melancholy, which usually makes women unattractive, had softened her, and tinged her expression wistfully.

Like most women, she needed anchorage desperately. Formerly she clung to Craig. Wanting, and not wanting him. She had asked him to tell no one of their engagement. In that way, she felt that she had left a sort of loop hole.

Their attendants followed them. Bertha's rose pink had heightened her color. She looked hot and uncomfortable, and took Craig's arm awkwardly. As they passed Sybil and her mother, Craig smiled again.

Mrs. Thorne was crying softly, and Sybil braced herself for the ordeal of the reception. There was to be a wedding breakfast at Somerset Inn. Everything very nice and exceedingly correct. The Wests had a small apartment, and it simplified matters to have breakfast at the smart little seashore hostelry.

"After all," as Mrs. West had said to Mr. West, "Valerie's our only daughter, and we might as well do the thing up right."

"Oh, sure," conceded Mr. West heartily. "We'll give Val a good sendoff."

The affair was entirely successful. A muffled orchestra played softly, and everything was quiet and decorous.

"I suppose it's a dreadful thing to say," remarked Mrs. West to Mr. West, as they drove home in a hired limousine afterward, "but since Mr. Thorne had to die anyway, it was the luckiest thing for us that he did it just before the wedding. Quiet weddings are ty swell little cabin, dear. How about it?"

"Oh, Tad, I'm not particularly keen about settling down in a hurry. If your mother will put up with us for awhile—it's so hot in Boston in the summer, you know. I'd lots rather wait."

Sybil went alone to Wianno, to open the place for the return of the newly-weds.

(To be continued)

Helen Wills says she improved her tennis by playing against men. It doesn't seem to work out that way in bridge, however.

Although the Nisqually Glacier, one of the largest of the many on the great mountain in Rainier National Park, advances from 16 to 20 inches a day during the summer, it is melting away at its terminus at the rate of 50 feet year.

Steam caves and fumaroles, warmed by jets of live steam, are still found in the crater of the great mountain in Rainier National Park, Wash., although the 14,408 foot peak is jacketed with perpetual ice and snow.

Like most women, she needed anchorage desperately. . . She clung to Craig, wanting him and not wanting him.

"Goodby, then, dear. We'd love to have you at the wedding, wouldn't we? And the reception, too. It's for our very best friends—be'd adore having you. Would, Tad?"

"Delighted," mused Tad, icily.

They were shakings, Lord Montford and Valerie.

"So sorry," he ter, "that I shan't be able to you'll look me up when you over to London? And rebur me to your charming motto curious to have seen you again."

"Damn clown!" hit Tad, and tugged a little Valerie's arm.

Outside she turn him.
"Well, Tad Thorne don't know whether I waikiss you, or slap you. You hot, you! You darling old th!"

"You know I wait, Valerie."
"Yes, of course. Twy I'm so sore about it. Y always right. And I'm al wrong. But, Taddy, that wpeach of a ring! I'll never hvther like it."

She sounded very ill.
"You're a little im. Don't you know it would an awful simp out of me, to hu wearing a ring like that, another man?"

"Oh, I suppose so, agreed, "but that isn't my fs it?"
He looked at her ly.

"No," he agreed ly, "it isn't. But you don'to marry me, you know, Vabu don't want to."

"Don't be a fool, admonished him saucily. "know I do."

Three days later thre married.

Valerie wore her pink, and carried roses o deeper shade. She seemed like a fairy princess than le, and looked as though she risen from the heart of a. Her veil billowed about hi clouds at sunrise, and ever hispered, as they always doudings, "Isn't she the lovelidie you ever saw!"

Tad seemed very s and a little pale, as he bently over her exquisite wife curly chestnut hair was great the temples, and though less boyish, he appeared handsome. Morning cloud silk hats make some mettesque and others magnificent—was the Apollo type.

Mrs. Thorne bustround,

Now she studied him critically, as he stood at the altar, waiting for the bridegroom. He caught her glance, and smiled at her with his eyes. He was really very handsome, she reflected, and remembered with quiet humor, a bit of her mother's homely advice— "A girl could go a lot further and fare worse."

"Here comes the bride!"

The little organ in the loft was booming exultantly. And Valerie, on her father's arm, marched down the aisle. Eyes downcast, arms full of roses, and a big, white prayer book in her little hands.

She looked like a nun, devout and pure. Tad, coming from the vestry, had joined Craig. All other eyes were for Valerie, but Sybil's dwelt compassionately on her brother.

"Poor Taddy. Poor little devil. If she's not good to you, I'll fix her!"

Valerie was making the responses. Clear and sweet her voice rang through the church. Sybil had heard her at rehearsal the evening before, instructing Tad.

"Speak up good and loud, dear. Most men mumble so foolishly."

And now Tad was mumbling. You could scarcely hear his voice beyond the chancel rail.

The little church was heavy with roses and all the langorous, passionate odor of crimson flowers. Candles flickered in tall holders. And there was hint of incense, and the close, sweet smell of sanctity. A gold chalice stood on the altar, and a Bible dripping purple satin ribbons.

"It's like Val!" thought Sybil, "getting tied up so grandly and fussily, with all this holiness. She is making it seem complicated, but that doesn't make any difference. It comes untied these days, however elaborately it's knotted."

Man and wife! It was over. Tad bent and kissed his bride.

"Part of the act," reflected Sybil.

She had inadvertently heard that, too.

"As soon as the minister blesses us," Valerie had told him, "you're to take me in your arms, Tad, like a movie lover and kiss me very gently. Be careful not to muss me. And if you catch your buttons on my veil, I'll leave you on the spot."

They were coming up the aisle. Valerie's slim hand rested lightly on Tad's arm. She smiled to left and right, leaning prettily on her husband.

comparatively reasonable, you know. My dear, I simply shudder to think what this affair would have cost us if the Thornes weren't in mourning."

Mrs. West folded her hands upon her ample bosom. "It's an ill wind," she remarked, "that blows nobody good."

Tad and Valerie were going to drive to Montreal and Quebec, and upon their return were to visit at the Thornes' place at Wianno. They planned to start housekeeping in the fall, and would not look for an apartment until mid-summer. Valerie had been quite indifferent about a place of her own.

"Oh, of course, we can get some thing when we get around to it, Tad," she insisted, "but why rent a place now, and start paying rent months ahead of time?"

"But I should think," he ventured, "that you'd be anxious to get all your things around. We've got a raft of wedding presents. Val. Guess we can fix up a pret-

CONTINUES TO ASK CUT IN NARCOTIC DRUGS

Wants Production Limited to Actual Medical Scientific Needs.

GENEVA.—The limitation of the production of harmful drugs to the world's actual medical and scientific needs continues to be the American slogan before the League of Nations' opium advisory commission.

The state department has just submitted to the league an entirely new plan for the attainment of this end which it is believed meets all of the practical obstacles that have been encountered to date.

The present situation in China, however, makes it certain that many years will elapse before a stable government can be created that will bring about a control of the production of raw opium that would justify other opium producing countries in enforcing similar restrictive measures.

The question of limiting the production of coca leaves is also exceedingly difficult owing to the fact that in various countries the trees grow wild and limitation would be virtually impossible.

Factories in Eight Nations. Undaunted by the impossibility of making headway along this line, the United States' new project just submitted to the league, provides for the limitation of the manufactured product.

Virtually all of the "dope" in the world is now produced in some 40 factories, located in eight different countries, namely the United States, England, Germany, France, Switzerland, Holland, India and Japan.

Seven of these factories or those located in the United States, England and India, are sufficiently controlled to render certain that products reach only the legitimate trade. It is from the others that the bulk of the "dope" reaching the illicit trade is procured.

The gist of the new American project for the limitation of the manufactured drugs to the world's medical and scientific needs is contained in two proposals.

The first of these proposals is that every country shall notify the league's commission just what their legitimate need of these drugs is for a fixed period in advance.

The second provision that they shall also declare from what countries they propose to purchase this legitimate supply.

Under this system it is believed the league could show just what countries are producing or purchasing more than their legitimate supply and the force of public opinion would be sufficient to influence the offending nations.

Oil and Gas Industry's Safety Team Will Compete at Tulsa

TULSA, Okla.—Elimination of hazards in the petroleum industry is featured in the program of the International Petroleum Exhibition and Congress to be held in Tulsa, October 20 to 29.

The National Safety Council, the safety section of the Mountain Oil and Gas Association, the United States Bureau of Mines and the safety committee of the production of the program are combined to combat the danger of the field and plant with interesting and highly instructive demonstrations in safety work at the exposition.

That horror of the World War, poison gas, is a grim specter hovering over many fields where oil and gas are produced. On the modern derrick, also, a man may meet a fall higher than 100 feet of steel and a dog wheel falling from a derrick may tear through a human eye.

An oversight or a miscalculation and a man is hurled through walls or timbers. A chain link or slips and men are buried under a load of steel casings.

Carelessness at the refining plant or where natural gas is manufactured, may result in a fire or serious injury. Explosions are not fire but two of the many dangers.

To remove these perils is the purpose of the exposition says program.

The United States Bureau of Mines will have its most modern railway safety car on the grounds of the World's Fair of the Oil Industry. Many approved safety appliances such as gas masks, safety belts, asbestos suits, rubber boots, fighting equipment, and the like will be demonstrated by the bureau.

The National Safety Council will exhibit a series of safety posters showing how petroleum workers may be injured, hazards to avoid and safe practices. On the corner will distribute safe practice pamphlets among the petroleum workers at the exposition and congress. These pamphlets carry new items on current accident cases and suggestions to prevent their recurrence, safety kinks and special items for the employer's education and interest in accident prevention. Motion picture films of special interest in accident prevention will be shown.

The safety section of the Mid-Continent Oil and Gas Association will hold its Fourth Annual Petroleum First Aid Meet at the exposition and congress.

Will Score Failure. An analysis of the scope of the first aid meet is giving a notable number of mistakes for which discredits will be made in the safety scores of participating teams.

PIGGY WIGGLY TO CELEBRATE ANNIVERSARY

Stores Number 2,900 In 800 Cities of U. S., Being Growth in Twelve Years.

In October, twelve years ago, the first Piggy Wiggly was opened in Memphis. Today there are 2,900 Piggy Wiggly stores in 800 cities in the United States and are fittingly celebrating this occasion all Piggy Wiggly stores will, during the week of October 1st to 6th, offer to their thousands of patrons unusual bargains.

Piggy Wiggly pioneered in self-service, giving their customers the opportunity of selecting with their own hands their table necessities. Piggy Wiggly pioneered in cleanliness, setting a new standard in appearance of food stores. Piggy Wiggly pioneered in orderly arrangement of goods, same goods are in the same place in all Piggy Wiggly stores.

Piggy Wiggly has succeeded because it appeals to the thrift, taste, comfort and convenience of the housewife. The Piggy Wiggly System is different from other systems in that the stores in each city are locally owned and locally operated and the owner of the stores is virtually interested in all local affairs.

The home office keeps each operator informed as to prices with offices in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles, and buys direct from the manufacturers for the different operators, thereby insuring them the best prices. The home office also keeps operators advised as to new and successful merchandising and advertising ideas.

Visitors at Piggy Wiggly are always welcomed and will not be solicited to purchase whether they buy or not.
