The November term of the Eastland county commissioners' court, which convened Monday, Nov. 9, at which time all members and the county judge were present, has had a rather busy session, transacting much important business.

An order was passed employing Judge Joe H. Jones to assist the county attorney in the filing and prosecuting suits against delinquent taxpayers of the county, his compensation to be 10 per cent of all monies recovered, $250 to be paid in cash in advance as a retainer, but this payment to be deducted from monies collected by him.

An order by Ed S. Pritchard, as county judge, ordering an election in the Morton Valley common school district No. 4 to determine whether or not schools should be in the amount of $1,000 should be issued, was passed, and C. R. Bond was named as the presiding officer of the election, which is to be held on the fifth of December.

A petition signed by J. H. Guy and others asking for the opening of a public road from the Sweet Springs and Bear Springs communities to Carbox, was considered and the order granting the opening of the road passed, the petitioners agreeing to secure the necessary right of way and the work required to put the road in shape for travel. This road will begin at a point on the old Eastland-Comanche road at the northeast corner of the T. L. Barton place; thence in a western course on the north boundary of the following named tracts: T. L. Barton, Mrs. J. N. Collins, W. R. Bennett, W. C. Couch, W. W. Speer, Will Gorman, Neill, W. W. Speer, Courtney, and on the northwest corner of the W. M. Beatty place; thence south with the Eastland-Carbox road to the railroad crossing and along the south side of the railroad to the town of Carbox.

A petition signed by H. L. Gibson and others asking for the widening of the old Breckenridge-Eastland road, which runs in a northwestern direction out of Eastland, passing along the shores of Lake Eastland, was presented to the court and passed.

THANKSGIVING DAY PROGRAM IN RANGER

Aside from the football game scheduled between Ranger and Strawn, Thursday afternoon, Thanksgiving Day will be more like a Sabbath than a gay holiday in Ranger, it is indicated. Home dinners will be the rule. Merchants report a very satisfactory sale of turkeys and other viands suitable to the day. But all these will be private dinners. No public dinners are announced. The Ranger churches will have a union service in the Central Methodist Church at 10:30 o'clock.

All the larger business places will be closed for the day except that grocers are given the option of opening a few minutes in the morning to accommodate customers. How many will avail themselves of that privilege, is, of course, to be determined by the postoffice will, of course, be closed. The Lions Club, following the general tendency, have postponed their regular weekly luncheon to give members opportunity to dine with their families.

The Times, according to its usual custom, will print one large edition early Thanksgiving morning in lieu of Wednesday's and Thursday's regular editions.

Thanksgiving Day Paper To Be Issued Thursday Morning

In keeping with the policy of this newspaper to give its readers the latest news up to the minute of publication, which requires publication even on recognized holidays, it has been decided to merge the editions of Wednesday and Thursday of this week and issue one paper Thursday morning.

The usual paper Wednesday afternoon will be omitted and in its place will be issued an edition that will combine Wednesday and Thursday and it will be distributed to its readers early Thursday morning.

By doing this the readers will get their newspaper at a time when they will have opportunity to read and enjoy it, instead of late Wednesday, when they will be busy preparing for the coming holiday or late Thursday, when they will be engaging in holiday pursuits.

Advertisers are urged to take notice, as this will be an excellent opportunity to catch the eye and hold the attention of each reader.

COTTON PRICES ADVANCE WITH LATE ESTIMATE

Government Bureau Tardily Admits Low Yield; Ranger Is Now 1,530 Bales.

That Eastland county farmers who said the federal bureau estimates on the 1925 cotton crop were excessive, were correct in their statements, is borne out by the late admission of the bureau that the crop would fall short of former estimates. This is revealed in the last report which reduces former estimates by 150,000 bales.

The prevailing Eastland county prices are reflected by Ranger prices it is said, which now range around 20-1/2 to 21 cents middling basis. The total number of bales ginned in Ranger will run right close to the prior estimate, it is said. The total ginning at that place up to Monday night was exactly 1530 bales. About 100 bales are yet to gin, it is estimated. Similar figures from other points bear out the prediction that the crop, although decidedly larger than in 1924, will fall fully 20 per cent under early season estimates.

Futures have followed fairly closely the spot prices on the exchange throughout the county, it is stated. The slight differences between spot cotton and January cotton have been hardly sufficient to mention.

NOBODY BIDS ON PAVING

The advertisement for bids on paving the pike tail which connects the new Pleasant Grove road with the Ranger pavement has been fruitless, it is stated at the Ranger city hall. This by no means indicates abandonment of the project, it is stated. In the event none files a bid for the job, the city may undertake the task itself, it is said.

Officials are puzzled at the failure of any contractor to file a bid on this work. Belief that the tangled condition of highway affairs in general may be responsible for it is expressed.

MITCHELL SAYS U. S. IS USING DEATH PLANES

Insists Army and Navy Should Get Rid of Its "Flaming Coffins."

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24.—Col. William Mitchell today reiterated his charges of criminal neglect in the administration of the air service by the war and navy departments. He said that sending aviators aloft in wartime De Havilland planes constituted criminal negligence.

"The government should get rid of these flaming coffins," he said. "So long as airmen are forced to go aloft in De Havilland planes they are going to be killed. It is criminal negligence to keep men flying in airships of this type."

Under cross examination by Major Allen Gullion, assistant trial judge advocate, Mitchell charged that all air service equipment is growing more dangerous every day. "We are even running out of spare parts," he added.

Mitchell launched another attack when Gullion questioned him on accidents. He disagreed with some of the inquiry board conclusions. "You can't get away from it," said Mitchell. "The death of these men was the direct result of faulty equipment. The accidents are not due to faulty piloting but to the flaming coffins the pilots must use."

"Do you consider San Antonio out of the way place?" he was asked. "I do so far as any influence I may exert on air service is concerned," he replied.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24.—Attorney General Dan Moody is a Washington visitor, but "is doing no talking." "I left the highway fight back in Austin," he said, "and I do not intend to discuss it here. Moody said he was here to file a suit involving about 30,000 acres in the Texas Panhandle and the boundary line between Oklahoma and Texas. He will return to Texas Thursday night.

TRACK TEAM SWEATERS FOR RANGER HIGH ARRIVE

The track team men of Ranger High school who won their letters last year were far-sighted in waiting until sweater season to have their sweaters come in. These garments arrived in Ranger Tuesday morning. There are four of them, all very tasty, with large "R" pierced by an arrow, emblem of speed.

The four men winning these are J. Walker, Buster Mills, Troy Grubbs and Homer Short. Once a technicality pre-dating his entrance into Ranger High is removed, it is said Homer Shipp will in all probability be added to the list of last year's winners.

"MA" FERGUSON DENIES HEARING TO LEGISLATOR

Declines To Comment On Ultimatum With Reference to Calling Special Legislative Session.

AUSTIN, Nov. 24.—Gov. Miriam A. Ferguson refused to see a member of the state legislature who called at her office today to deliver a petition signed by 55 members of the legislature asking her to call a special session of that body. The petition which was in the form of an ultimatum gave the governor until Dec. 10 to decide whether or not to call the extra session.

Being refused entrance, Representative Alfred Patsch delivered the petition to the governor's secretary and left instructions that it be placed in the governor's hands.

Speaker Lee Satterwhite reiterated today that he intended to call the special session to meet not later than Jan. 4 if the governor refuses to do so.

Governor Ferguson said at noon she would have nothing to say today with reference to the petition for a special session. The governor, with her husband, James E. Ferguson, and other members of her family leave tomorrow for A. & M. college to spend Thanksgiving day and will return to Austin Friday.

Neither the governor nor her husband, former Gov. James E. Ferguson, up to noon today had issued a statement with reference to possible appointments to fill vacancies on the highway commission caused by the resignations of Chairman Frank V. Lanham and Joe Burkett yesterday.

AUSTIN, Nov. 24.—Frank V. Lanham, resigned highway commission chairman, was summoned to appear before the Travis county grand jury today.

Investigating among other things the state highway department, the grand jury is scheduled to make a report before Friday.

STUDENTS OF NORTHWESTERN STAGE A RIOT

Burn Old Building and Fight Police, Firemen and War Veterans. Eight Arrests Are Made.

EVANSVILLE, Ind., Nov. 24.—Eight students at Northwestern university are under arrest today and more are to be taken into custody in connection with last night's riot, in which 2,000 students battled for several hours with more than 100 Evansville police, firemen and war veterans.

The riot was staged in protest against Michigan's claim to an undisputed championship in the Big 10 conference and reached its climax with the burning of an abandoned fraternity house and an attempt to burn a condensed row of bleacher seats at the athletic field.

Northwestern university won three games and lost one, while Michigan won five games and lost one, but because Northwestern beat Michigan it was claimed credit should be given for a tie. No official title is awarded and when a majority of the sports writers said Michigan was entitled to the championship the Wolverine student body assembled.

The students started a snake dance and gathered wood for a bonfire, the intention being at first to celebrate the football team's record and let the world know that Northwestern had gained the championship, but as the crowd grew the mob spirit increased and the students descended upon the fraternity house which was being wrecked to make way for a new building. It was spangled with oil and burned to the ground.

First the firemen and then the police were summoned; then a riot call was sent to Chicago and reserve officers sent out. The rioters derailed a street car and then seized and turned an automobile upside down.

Mayor Bartlett of Evansville appeared, was handled roughly by the mob and retreated.

President Scott of Northwestern, who was in Chicago when the riot occurred, refused comment this morning, but said that proper action would be taken.

BIBLE THOUGHT.
Free From Want: The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want.—Psalm 23:1.
Prayer: Thou great Shepherd of the sheep, we delight to acknowledge ourselves the sheep of Thy pastures.

WHY WE SHOULD BE THANKFUL
Because we live under the best form of government in the world.
Because we are at peace with all nations of the earth and because of our independence wield the most influence of any nation in the world.
Because no nation has as many home-owners and no people enjoy better living conditions.
No nation in the world has greater religious freedom or more facilities for higher education of the coming generation.
No land approaches us in national wealth and no country has a greater variety of fertile and productive soil.
In no other country are there such countless opportunities for advancement, and nowhere are wage earners and tillers of the soil enjoying such comfortable remuneration.
No other people enjoy so much entertainment, amusement and recreation.
Our railroads, telegraphs, telephones, radios, automobiles and road systems are unmatched.
Our richest men exercise a generosity unequalled in all the world; slums are almost unknown and few there are who ever need to go hungry.
Our borders are not threatened with war and never liable to be if we do not become embroiled in questionable diplomacy.
We are abundantly blessed with peace and plenty, and with the means of extending a helping hand to others less happily situated.
We are closely following the pledge contained in the declaration of independence—a pledge of life, fortune and sacred honor in a brotherhood, and a responsibility toward our fellow man.
The United States of America may well offer devout thanks.

Opposition of the various district conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church South has defeated the proposition to unite with the North. Although the North voted overwhelmingly for the union. The chief objection of the South seems to be the admission of the negroes to the union. There is no indication that this objection can be overcome in many years.

According to government statistics Sweden this year enjoys the greatest harvest it has ever known. The yield of wheat was double the normal figure and the yield of rye is three times as great. The Canadian wheat crop is the second largest on record.

A HINT TO THE CREDIT MAN.
How often has Bill Jones, we'll say, told you he would pay that old bill when he sold his crops in the fall? And then—the harvesting season comes and goes, but you see nothing of Bill and the money.

Good Hardware tells of a Maine dealer who knows how easy it is for the Bill Jones of his town to forget their overdue bills and spend the cash elsewhere. He solves the problem this way:

"The next time he meets Bill, he says: 'Bill, I want some good potatoes such as you raise, and I'll send the truck out to get your crop, if you'd just as soon sell 'em to me as anybody at the full market price.'"

Of course, he has arranged to resell the "spuds" but the fact is that now Bill can't spend that money until he gets it from the hardware man and when he gets it, he can't very well dodge that old account.

BEGIN HERE TODAY:

Barbara Hawley, 25, after teaching school three years, decided to see life.

When her fiancé, Bruce Reynolds, objects, she breaks with him and gets a job on the Telegram, of which Andrew McDermott, a close friend of her father, before his death, is managing editor.

Returning home, Barbara finds Bruce on her doorstep.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY: Chapter II.

Barbara saw him before he saw her.

The sunlight struck a rebellious lock of hair that always, to her mind, gave him the air of a particularly childish Billiken, even in the midst of tragedy.

It made Barbara gasp, to see the sun on that lock. It called back so many things. She stiffened her carriage and advanced toward the steps.

Bruce seemed lost in thought. He did not raise his head until she stood almost over him. When he did, he stared at her a second and sprang to his feet.

"I had to come, Barbara. Things said at midnight don't count next day."

Barbara unlocked the door and ushered him in. "Sit down in the living room a moment, Bruce," she said quite naturally, while I go up and take off my wraps. I shan't be long."

Upstairs, Barbara rushed to her dressing table, added a touch of bloom to her cheeks, dusted a puff across her nose and ran a comb through her hair. Her eyes, still sparkling with the thought of the new job, smiled at her reflection in the glass. Barbara had always admitted to herself that she was satisfactory to look at. And now, with a spurned lover waiting downstairs, she found added spice in her beauty.

Bruce was sunk in the depths of the big davenport when Barbara entered the living room. He rose and went quickly to her, reaching for her hands.

She evaded him gracefully and seated herself in an armchair at some distance from the couch.

Bruce began to speak, the words tumbling out in haste. "I've been waiting for you for hours, Babs. The house seemed to be empty. Nobody answered the bell. So I just sat down and waited. I simply had to see you." Barbara made as if to interrupt him, the boy rushed on.

"It can't be true, Babs, dear. All this day I've been telling myself that I dreamed it, and when you came home, everything would all right. We can't give each other up, sweet-heart. We love each other too much."

He was standing beside her now. "Why, Barbara, we've grown into each other's hearts so that we can't break apart now. We'd never forget, dear, and we'd never be happy."

Barbara had been listening quietly, her eyes cool and distant. She sighed gently and looked up at him. "Have you quite finished, Bruce?" she asked. "Because, if you have, perhaps you'd like to hear how I spent my day."

The boy looked at her, his eyes wide with misery. The lock of gold brown hair stood aloft on the crown of his head.

"No, I haven't finished," he flared. "You've got to listen to me. This is nonsense, breaking up a beautiful thing just because we differ on non-essentials. I don't care if you want to write, Barbara. You can do anything you choose, so long as you're all mine. I won't have my wife mixing with the herd, and grubbing for money, that's all."

"Non-essentials?" repeated Barbara. "My ambitions and talents are non-essentials. I suppose the only real essential is your petty conceit."

"But didn't you ever love me, Babs?" interrupted Bruce. "You couldn't have meant it when you said that between your ambitions and me, you'd choose your ambitions."

The telephone rang in the hall above. "Excuse me, please," said Barbara. "There's no one else at home to answer the phone."

A few moments later she returned, her eyes gleaming. "That was a call from Mr. McDermott's secretary. I am to go to work tomorrow instead of Monday." She had been longing to find a good opening for the topic of her new job.

Bruce stared at her. "To work? What do you mean?"

"I have been given a place on the staff of the Telegram," said Barbara. Her voice almost trembled with triumph.

The effect of her words upon Bruce satisfied her. He was clearly dumfounded. When he found his voice, he asked, "As a reporter, Barbara?"

Again Barbara heard the flat note with which Wilma Collins had pronounced the word.

"Yes," she snapped. "And perhaps you had better run along now. I have many things to do this afternoon, to get ready for work tomorrow. I must be at the office at seven-thirty in the morning."

"Do you mean that you will have to go running around the streets, into the offices of all kinds of men and into all sorts of low places, as a common newspaper reporter?" he asked.

Barbara looked at him aghast. This was intolerable. "It means exactly that," she said coldly. "It means that I'm ready to do anything from interviewing the president to sweeping out the Telegraph office. It means that I'm going to see life, instead of being tied to a kitchen all my days."

Bruce winced. But Barbara ran on.

"It means that my mind is going to live as well as my body, and that I'm going to be a person before I die."

"Is there anything else you'd like to know?"

"No," said Bruce slowly. "There isn't anything else, I guess. You've said about all there is to say. But you can't make it, Barbara. Even if you do succeed in the work, you'll be wretchedly unhappy. You can't live without love, Barbara. You can't live on intellect alone. You'll starve."

He looked around for his hat. He found it on the piano and crushed it between nervous fingers.

Barbara followed him to the door. "We'll say goodby, then," she almost cooed. "You're a nice boy, Bruce, but you don't understand me. It's lucky I found it out when I did."

He looked at her outstretched hand. Barely touching it, he said, "Goodby." As he stepped through the door, he put on the hat, crushing the rebel lock that stood on the crown of his head.

When Mrs. Hawley returned from a shopping trip, that evening, she found Barbara in the kitchen, standing over the ironing board. A pile of miscellaneous garments lay nearby on a chair. She was whistling a little out of tune, and plunging through the pressing job with reckless glee.

"Well, Babs," cried her mother, "what news?"

"Good news, mummy," cried Barbara, setting the iron down with a clang on its metal stand. "A job and everything. Going to work tomorrow. Expect to be writing American magazine articles on my success by the end of a year."

Mrs. Hawley smiled. There was no sign in Barbara's manner of a reprieve from her decision of the night before.

Barbara pushed her mother into a chair, chattering gaily about the new job, the interesting personality of McDermott, and the joys of newspaper work, as observed in her 15-minute wait in the Telegraph office that morning.

"It's such a lovely, noisy place, mummy," she cried. "And the smoke is so thick it chokes you, till you get used to it." She spoke as if the greater part of her 25 years had been spent in a smoky newspaper office.

"And people are all running around, as if they had a million things to do, all of them internationally important. Gee! What fun it's going to be, to work in the center of things, and to know everything before anybody else in town knows."

Mrs. Hawley smiled uncertainly. "Sounds pretty strenuous, Babs," she said. "I hope you won't break down. I've heard tales of what newspaper life did to people."

"Me break down?" Barbara's laugh was scornful. "Now I ask you, did I ever have a sick day in my life, except with measles and whooping cough? As for its being strenuous, I'll thrive on it. That's what I want—anything that's all excitement—the opposite of school teaching."

"What dress'll I wear tomorrow?" Without waiting for a reply, she had run up the step to survey the closet in which her rather meager wardrobe hung. Not a word had been said of Bruce's visit.

After dinner, Barbara and her mother settled themselves before the fire in Barbara's room, to refresh her work clothes with fresh collars and cuffs, and to sew on missing buttons.

"You know, it's really so easy to look spick and span," remarked Barbara to her mother, "if only you will give a little forethought to your clothes and have the right things for the right occasion."

At ten o'clock she drank hot chocolate and prepared to go to bed.

When Mrs. Hawley went downstairs to lock up the house for the night, she paused by the davenport in the living room. There, lying on the carpet that she had swept that morning was a cigaret stub, ground into the nap of the carpet.

She stooped and picked it up, as she had picked up innumerable similar stubs during the last two years.

When she went upstairs, she said nothing. But her brows were puckered.

The downtown streets of the city at seven-thirty in the morning were a revelation to Barbara. She had never walked through them at such an early hour before.

She had had no idea that life was stirring so early, that crowds of people were swarming into restaurants and office buildings before she rose in leisurely fashion to make ready for nine o'clock school.

These crowds of people, the smoky fog that covered the face of the early sun, the film of frost over the sidewalks—the bustle of the lunch counters behind their plate glass windows—all of these things were part of a picture that later came to typify to Barbara her whole life as a working woman.

She walked rapidly, after alighting from the interurban, trying not to think of the ordeal that lay ahead of her. As she neared the building in which the offices of the Telegraph were, she saw a clock. It said seven-twenty. She stared up at the win-

Barbara turned and walked away. There was still time to walk around the block and get her nose back. Ten minutes later, she stepped from the elevator into the editorial room of the Telegraph.

SKYSCRAPING COLLEGE TO BE BUILT IN PITTSBURG. From the bridge overlooking the Monongahela, black and satiny at night, still as a mirror, one sees the magic of Pittsburgh, the city of steel. On the water lies reflected a lane of fire and flame, burning from furnaces in mills and factories, where steel and glass for the whole world are melted, where all the wealth of some ancient city is created here as part of one day's work. It is a lane of fire never darkened, by night or day.

Two groups of people are the artisans of this magnificence; one the workingmen, thousands upon thousands of them, Hibernians and Slavs, and the other, the descendants of that stock which built the city, plowed its fields long ago, erected its schools, put up its churches, laid out the winding hilly streets, created the wealth pouring now to all parts of the earth—the Scotch-Irish. Canny and hard-headed are these folks—sobriety, industry, caution, saving, their characteristics.

Yet it is this city, and through the captured imagination of its Scotch-Irish business men and manufacturers, and because of the ardent faith of its immigrant citizens, that the amazing conception already famous as the "Cathedral of Learning" has found being. It is a group of men of this caliber that has been persuaded to carry out, in stone and in steel, the dream of a young man still in his teens, John Gabbert Bowman, Chancellor of the University of Pittsburgh. This autumn they are breaking ground in Pittsburgh for a college structure that may change the whole concept of educational architecture. This structure will be fifty-two stories high; the students will reach their classes by elevators; its formation will be of steel and its walls of stone. It is to cost ten million dollars. — From Everybody's Magazine.

Philippine Islands Rich In Minerals, But Obstacles Confront Development

Most people, when thinking of the Philippine Islands and their resources, have in mind simply their agricultural possibilities. The fact has been stressed that they have a monopoly of hard fiber (Manila hemp), that they now produce one-third of the world's output of copra (coconut meat), that they have millions of acres suitable for the growing of rubber and other essential tropical products, and that they are rich in forest resources. Little has been said, however, of their wonderful mineral deposits, and the part they will eventually take in the future prosperity of the archipelago.

Iron. In Surigao (Island of Mindanao) there are iron ore deposits estimated at over 500,000,000 tons, while on the adjacent island of Cebu are large seams of coking coal, making an ideal site for smelting operations. There are also other iron deposits in the Camarines and Bulacan (Island of Luzon), running into millions of tons. Given the scarcity of iron ore throughout the Far East, and the imperative need thereof in war and industry, it is easy to figure what control of these deposits signifies in the struggle now shaping for political and commercial supremacy in the awakening Orient.

Coal. Coal is found in quantity on the islands of Cebu, Polillo and Batan, as also in Southern Mindanao. In the latter field a semi-anthracite seam of some 10,000,000 tons has already been proven. Large bodies of copper ore exist in the province of Le Panto (Island of Luzon), awaiting only transportation facilities to make them available. Reports by expert geologists and surface showing indicate petroleum deposits in various parts of the archipelago. They occupy the same general belt as the proven oil fields of Borneo and Sumatra.

Among other minerals already utilized, and whose production can be readily expanded, are asbestos, sulphur, salt, lime, bituminous rock, building stone, and so forth. It is to be said, however, that the development of these mineral resources—which would add so greatly to the welfare and prosperity of the Filipino people—has lagged for the same reasons which have deterred any worth-while development of the agricultural possibilities of the islands.

Aside from their lack of large capital, Filipinos do not risk their money in speculative venture among which mining is classed. Their investment in this industry is less than one per cent of the total—such development as now exists having been accomplished by outside capital. In an effort to overcome this situation, the Philippine Legislature undertook during the Harrison administration—to promote such development through "National Companies" financed from Insular funds. Provision was made for a National Coal Company, a National Cement Company, a National Petroleum Company and a National Iron Company. The first two were launched, but soon became a clearing house for political favorites, and efforts are now being made to sell them to private interests. Despite the obvious fact that every encouragement possible should be afforded capital to realize this latent wealth of the Islands, existing legislation places innumerable obstacles in the way of such development. Among various other restrictions may be mentioned the following: only one claim can be located or held on any vein or lode by an individual or corporation; stockholders in one mining company cannot hold stock in any other company engaged in mining; an export or wharfage tax of $1 per ton on shipments of iron ore; a tax of 1-2 per cent on mineral production; the levy of a tax on non-producing mineral lands, and so forth.

The removal of these restrictions—which now effectively block development—would not only furnish an incentive to capital to enter this industry, but would supply employment to thousands of Filipinos, would increase the taxable wealth and revenues of the Islands, and this without detriment to any one.

The Dallas grade teachers' council will give an afternoon tea Friday from 3 to 5 o'clock. The tea will be given on the mezzanine floor of the Baker hotel. All visitors to the convention are invited to attend. Miss Beulah Keeton is president of the Dallas council. The grade teachers' association will hold a banquet and program Friday noon at the Adolphus hotel, with Miss Laura L. Allison of Austin as toastmaster. North Texas State Teachers' college ex-students will hold a banquet Thursday night at the Baker hotel starting at 6 o'clock. A varied program has been planned and entertainment provided for 1,700. President Robert L. Marquis will preside. Ex-students of many other colleges will hold meetings according to schedules. The convention is expected to have the largest attendance in the history of the association. MORE GAS WELLS ARE NEEDED EVERY YEAR. While the number of natural gas wells in the United States is close to 25,000, the business of tapping the sub-surface gas measures of the country yearly, presents increasing problems. The supply gradually grows more difficult and geological reports show that at no very remote date, it will pass beyond the range of economic operation, says the Texas Public Service Information Bureau. Texas is among the leading states in production of natural gas. So far as potential supplies are concerned it seems likely that Texas will have natural gas for a long time owing to the great areas that have not been developed which are expected to be found productive. Texas produces about one-seventh of all the natural gas produced in the United States. There is considerable waste of natural gas in the oil fields and there is room for economies in the use of this fuel in the homes and industries where it is used. As the great value and wasting character of natural gas people the efforts to prevent waste and prolong the life of the resources are accomplished a great deal. EASTLAND.—A proposal for the city of Eastland to go into the business of supplying the citizens of that city with natural gas was rejected last month by the voters of the city in an election held to decide the question. Eastland is served by a privately owned gas company. Special prices on our Oranges can't be beat. Try it. Wheeler's, Liberty theatre bldg.—Adv.

HIS HOBBY CARRIED HIM TO FAME

How William Francis Gibbs Rode His Boyhood Hobby to an International Reputation as a Designer of Ocean Greyhounds.

THE Cappadocia, newest and swiftest of ocean liners, slid smoothly off the ways. Under her own momentum she glided across the white capped surface of the bay. Two tugs that had been lying in wait puffed up to the knife-sharp bow and made fast their lines.

With an ear splitting shrieking of sirens and a swirling of waters the vessel was towed out of the channel and brought to rest close off shore. There she lay while William Francis Gibbs, the nine-year-old designer, studied her trim and the way she rode the waves set up by a passing cruiser. Then he lifted her out of the bathtub and marched off to his workshop.

Thirty Years Later Three decades have rolled by since the launching of the Cappadocia in a bathtub which the imagination of a boy had invested with the huge berths, the towering cranes, and all the other titanic activities of a busy shipyard. For the last seven years the man who was that boy has been recognized both at home and abroad as one of the most brilliant ship designers this country has ever produced.

From playing with toy boats to international fame as a marine architect! From the family bathtub to a famous shipyard on the Atlantic Coast, where this marine architect is busy today constructing the Malolo, the largest and fastest high-powered passenger steamship ever built in the United States! They seem like long jumps. They are, too! But not so long as they seem.

Most people will tell you that it is a good thing for a boy to have a hobby. William Francis Gibbs will go further. He will tell you that he would not be supervising the construction of a great liner today but for the boyhood hobby that led to the launching of the Cappadocia.

All of his success in later life goes back to that hobby. The hobby horse he groomed so carefully as a youngster has proved the steed to carry him to fame and fortune.

The Boy Gibbs Thousands and tens of thousands of American boys have built themselves toy boats and have sailed them in anything they could find, from the bathtub to the ocean. Caught by the beauty and the mystery of ships, a boy needs only his fertile imagination to people his craft with a swaggering crew and stuff her hold with the treasures of Cathay.

sign for a standard type of vessel to carry troops and supplies to the war zone.

Seven other models embodying the designs of other marine architects had floated in that tank before his; but the delicate instruments that measured speed, wind resistance and a mass of other technical detail showed that his model surpassed them all. When the design for the large standardized troop ships was adopted seven of the eleven essential points of design were by William Francis Gibbs.

Few men have made so swift a gallop to success. But then few men have ridden their hobbies so long and hard, or with so much singleness of purpose.

Doing the Impossible The scene shifts to the days after the war, and the Leviathan lying useless at her docks. The Germans had refused to sell the government or anyone else her plans except under preposterous terms. Without plans she could not be reconducted.

"All right," said Gibbs, "I'll make a new set of plans." The Germans laughed. So did other marine architects and engineers. It couldn't be done.

But Gibbs did it. With his staff he more of the time. The old delight of cruising down to Rio in a one pound brig with the trade winds whistling through her match stick rigging soon passes into the limbo of forgotten joys.

But in this respect young Gibbs differed from his fellows. Born in Philadelphia of a long line of farmers and merchants, there was no tradition of sea-faring ancestors to account for the grip ships had upon him. Yet for him ships of every kind kept throughout the years their pristine glamor and romance.

BIGGER and faster than any high-powered passenger steamship ever built in the United States, the Malolo's smokestacks would top a four-teen story building, while her three huge anchors, weighing twenty-three tons apiece, would be six stories above the pavement.

If she were set down with her bow at the corner of Fifth and Broadway, the Malolo's stern would rest well beyond the corner of Broadway and Fifty-second street. Her great breadth of beam would leave but six feet on either side between her and the building lines.

The huge vessel's electric lighting plant is to be equivalent to that of a town of 6,000 people. Her pumping system will equal the water works of a city of nearly two million.

the construction of the Malolo that William Francis Gibbs is doing his part to restore to his country her lost heritage of the sea.

When the Malolo is put into service on the San Francisco-Honolulu run in the spring of 1927 she will be something even more than the largest and fastest high-powered passenger steamship ever built on this side of the Atlantic. She will be a tangible proof that American yards can turn out ships the equal of those built anywhere in the world.

Hurling her 22,000 tons of steel through the long blue rollers of the tropic ocean at 25 miles an hour, this splendid monster will make the round trip between San Francisco and Honolulu in eight days—four days less than the fastest vessel now on the run.

The 600 passengers—all first class—will live in surroundings that will rival the luxury of the most famous of metropolitan hotels. A ballroom, a library, a gymnasium, a swimming pool—everything will be there that can add to the comfort of the voyage. On the whole broad bosom of the Pacific there will be no passenger vessel that can stand beside the product of an American designer and an American shipyard.

The design and construction of the Malolo is the latest episode in the brilliant career of a man who is still under forty. The most productive years of his life lie ahead of William Francis Gibbs. But no matter what heights he may reach, underneath his niche in the Hall of Fame should stand the words, "A Hobby Carried Him Here."

William Francis Gibbs (right) and Captain Herbert Hartley who commanded the Leviathan on her trial trip after reconduction.

whole shipping world. But the shipping world was in for a still greater shock. On her trial trip, after the reconduction, the Leviathan made a speed of over two knots per hour above anything she had ever developed before. The young American had beaten the Germans at their own game.

For American Ships It is only natural that a man who has loved ships so long and so well should dream of and work for the return of the days when the American flag was seen in every port and was swept in surging circles around the world.

"I am for American ships and a great American merchant navy," says Gibbs, "not only as a matter of pride, but because any nation with a coast line as long as ours is by nature a maritime nation. We have fallen from our national estate only because of the high pressure of a pioneer westward movement into the interior that has now virtually ceased.

"Today the cities of the west are industrial centers. The vast and once trackless prairies have become waving fields of grain that Europe looks to as one of the chief sources of its food supply. We have become a nation of manufacturers, agriculturalists, and exporters; and we should develop a system of ocean transportation to parallel our railroad system which is the greatest in the world.

"But, material considerations aside, ships are our birthright. Our history proves it. And even though the inland empire has been conquered by the onward march of civilization, there still remains an ocean empire ready to yield honor and more tangible rewards to American seafarers and the men who man the ships."

Fast Game To Be Played In Ranger Thanksgiving Day

Not even the season's conference games during the days when the Ranger Bulldogs were contesting for district honors, afforded a game of greater interest to Ranger team and fans, it is said, than the Turkey Day game scheduled for 3 p. m. sharp in Ranger with the fast playing Strawn team. Among the items which are said to contribute to the interest in this game none stands out more prominently than the grim fact that no Ranger team has ever yet taken a game from Strawn. True, the team Ranger will play this year, as in former years, will not be composed of her best fighting material entirely, it is said. However, this year, due to the fact that Cooper, Alfred, Glenn, England, and Gholson are all out with injuries, J. Walker and Buster Mills will both go in for Ranger, it is stated. Even so, it is of recent record that Strawn, with her fast little bunch of players, defeated Gorman by a score of 16 to 6, whereas, Ranger let Gorman tie up the game.

Aside from these two, (With Mills doubtful) the entire Ranger team will be composed of 1926 players. Strawn will bring her best and do her best, it is said. The outcome is exceedingly doubtful and few are making any predictions with an sort of certainty according to coach and fans. The game originally scheduled to be played in Strawn has been changed to Ranger.

The Gordon Weekly News, J. A. Tetts, Jr., publisher, is among the late contributions to Texas journalism in the oil belt section. The paper is a six column folio with insert making it a six page paper, well printed and more than ordinarily newsy.

HOW DO YOU PAY

- Your Physician?
- Your Dentist?
- Your Promptness in Paying these Bills is a Part of Your Credit Record.

Your credit record is available to every member of the Ranger Retail Merchants Association. The association is composed of the merchants and professional men who extend you credit when you buy their merchandise or their service.

Some people fail to realize that physicians' and dentists' bills must be paid promptly. Some apparently pay such bills when they get ready—and they "get ready" months after payment is due or never.

An appeal to your pride should be sufficient to correct this evil. You buy from your physician and your dentist the thing that you rate as most important in this world's goods—health! The man or woman who does not pay promptly for VALUABLE SERVICE ought not and WILL NOT be considered a good moral risk by those who sell merchandise.

Stewart's Washington Letter

BY CHARLES F. STEWART NKA Service Writer

WASHINGTON — Something I said in print recently concerning motorists' troubles in Washington fretted Traffic Director Eldridge so that he dropped in, with blood in his eye, to see me about it.

"No doubt you've been pinched yourself," he accused. "That's what makes you so uppity."

"Mr. Eldridge," I assured him, "out of this country's entire population I'm one of about half a dozen who never owned or drove an automobile."

"You see," the director explained, all his anger lost now in curiosity, "we have to bear down pretty hard here on traffic law violations or there'd be a massacre."

"All the states roundabout have automobile registration regulations which make it hard to dispose of stolen cars. But in the District of Columbia we have none. Consequently, the minute a machine's swiped anywhere in our vicinity, it's rushed into the District to be disposed of, and it sells for a song, generally.

"The result is that more totally irresponsible people own autos in Washington than any city in the United States, for its size. They'd race right through the capitol, knock down the Washington Monument and park in the Lincoln Memorial if we didn't keep a tight rein on 'em."

THEN I broached to the traffic director my great scheme for a Pedestrians' League of America.

"What we pedestrians need," I argued, "is organization. The autoists have it. When their rights are involved they have a big association, with high-priced lawyers, a legislative lobby and barrels of money, to fight for them."

"But the individual pedestrian is just a poor, lone, down-trodden pedestrian. He wouldn't be so safe to kick, cuff, browbeat, knock down and run over if he belonged to a powerful league, sworn to defend him."

"There couldn't," objected Eldridge, "be such a thing as 'powerful' pedestrians' league. There aren't enough of them to form a quorum, let alone a league, with any punch behind it."

JUSTICE OF NATURE IN DEATH OF KILLER

By United Press.

VANCOUVER, B. C., Nov. 23.—A simple story of "the justice of the wild," was told here by A. E. Shelton, who witnessed the incident, unusual for the confines of a city.

From out the sky a sparrow hawk swooped down on a sparrow, hopping on the lawn of an apartment house. With one blow of its beak, the hawk killed the smaller bird.

TWO MILLION PIMPLE VICTIMS SWEAR BY IT

Sounds like a big figure, and it is big. That many times during the year people go to their nearest store and ask for Black and White Ointment and Soap, because they have come to depend on them to keep their skin free from pimples, blotches, bumps, eczema, rash, tetter, "breaking out," etc.

You won't know what real happiness and fun is until you make yourself presentable, so to speak, to the people who want to associate only with those who are good to look at. Begin using Black and White Ointment and Soap and feel the thrills girls, women and men experience when they see their ugly skin clearing up, feeling smooth and looking lovely.

They are both economically priced, in liberal packages. The 50c size Ointment contains three times as much as the 25c size. All dealers have both Ointment and Soap. (adv.)

As it walked around its victim, sounding a cry of victory, a cat stalked atop the adjoining wall, crouched low with blazing eyes, and leaped. The hawk glimpsed the cat from a sharply turned eye, seized the sparrow in its talons and flew to freedom.

Who Is Your Best Friend?

Someone has said that a friend in need is a friend indeed. Who, then, is your best friend?

We are not thinking of the friends of your hale and hearty days, but of the friend when you are troubled.

Who is it whose coming you look forward to when wife, mother or husband is ill?

Who is it you eagerly watch for every few moments when one of the little tots in the house is sick?

It is the physician.

Every husband, every wife, and especially every parent has known the thrill—of feeling of safety and relief that comes with the doctor's ring at the door when a loved one has become ill. This is especially true when the sickness develops at night.

You have hastened to call your doctor; perhaps you have paced the floor awaiting his arrival. Perchance your family physician is away or on another case. You call another. He may not know you. Yet in accordance with the custom and honor of his profession, he answers your call as promptly as possible.

Isn't such a man a friend in need? Do you pay him as promptly as he answers your call? It is regrettable that the facts show that many people seem to forget that their physician must be paid. He is your servant. He comes at your call. His fees are small. Certainly you'd gladly pay double and treble if it was necessary.

Then why not pay him promptly? If you are too worried at the time of the visit, the least you can do is to pay him within thirty days. You pay all other accounts on this basis. Certainly your doctor—your friend in need—is entitled to the same consideration as any other individual or firm with whom you do business.

Even the most daring of scientific romancers have never imagined machinery that starts operating all by itself, at the very moment when needed, and shuts down when no longer required. Yet that sort of magic-like apparatus is here to stay, in the automatic electric generating station.

During 1924, 440,000 new customers were connected to the line of manufactured gas companies, making a total of 10,240,000 gas customers as of December 31, 1924. Figuring five persons to a meter, more than fifty million American persons benefit from gas service.

Newspaper Owner As Dramatic Critic Reverses Verdict of Own Reviewers

By United Press.

LONDON, Nov. 23.—When one man owns three newspapers, and his theatrical critics for the three papers, all violently disagree as to the merits of a play, who's to decide which one is right?

Answer—The owner of the papers. This at any rate is the conclusion reached by Lord Beaverbrook owner of the "Daily Express" the "Sunday Express" and the "Evening Standard" whose critics wrote three such widely different criticisms of the American comedy "Mercenary Mary" that Lord Beaverbrook was dizzy when he got through reading them.

One wrote that "Mercenary Mary" was "awful." A second wrote that it was "great." A third didn't know what to think.

So Lord Beaverbrook took the job of dramatic critic into his own hands for one evening and went to see the play.

Vindictes Mary

Result: A complete, sweeping first-page vindication for Mary. In fact the London theatrical world is beginning to think it lost a first-class agent, when Lord Beaverbrook went into the publishing business instead of the theatrical business. For in a letter to the editor, which appeared on the first page of the "Sunday Express" Lord Beaverbrook writes:

"Sir,—I went on Friday night to see the comedy "Mercenary Mary." I thought it one of the most wholesome and delightful entertainments I have ever seen. It is conspicuous for the prettiness of the stage setting and the charm of the music, and the real wit and humor of the book."

"Miss Peggy O'Neil shows a diversity of talent of which I never realized she was capable. Mr. A. W. Baskenb proved himself in this production at least, a real rival as a comedian to Joe Coyne." (An American comedian.) "For my own part, I could not conceive of higher praise, for I consider Joe Coyne the greatest comedian of our age."

And now comes Lord Beaverbrook's slap at his own papers.

"I went to see "Mercenary Mary" his letter continues, "because of the marked difference of opinion on the play exhibited by the dramatic critics of the "Daily Express" the "Sunday Express" and the "Evening Standard," in appraising the first performance of the play."

Criticizes Critics

"The distinguished novelist who writes on plays for the "Daily Express" if not absolutely unfavorable, was distinctly critical. The comment in the "Evening Standard" on the other hand, gave as high and glowing praise as I have given in this letter. Now comes Mr. Hannon Swaffer, in today's "Sunday Express" with what I interpret as a complete con-

Caused by circumstances over which we have no control we will be forced to postpone the opening date of our sale. Monday's advertisement said plainly our sale would open Wednesday, Nov. 25. We regret very much to be delayed, but if everyone knew just what this sale means in dollars and cents to them; if they knew the slump in merchandise this sale of sales will cause in Ranger and all over this section, then we believe a two-days wait will be well paid for.

THE NEW DATE IS NOW SET FRIDAY, NOV. 27th

The whole "Boston" force is now working like beavers making everything ready and we wish to drive this fact home: When the doors of this sale open for business Friday morning the people of Ranger are going to be the most agreeably surprised bunch of folks who ever attended a sale. demnation—of the performance. "In my opinion, he is mistaken, and I claim the right to say so. "For while on the one hand I would not think as the principal shareholder of a newspaper, of trammeling the right of distinguished critics to give their true and unbiased opinions of plays they see, I claim on the other hand, equal freedom to record my own impressions. I would not attempt to curtail their liberty—but I reserve for myself a single liberty, too—that of dissent. Faithfully yours, BEAVERBROOK."

THEN AND NOW.

By Ida Tarbell.

Can any woman who has ever traveled refuse to be thankful over the downfall of the ladies' entrance of the old hotel? Emancipation is summed up for me in the freedom I feel when I enter directly into a hotel by the front door, cross the lobby to the desk, and without causing any stir write my name, take my key and quietly go about my business, unabashed by any insinuating looks and whispers.

There was a time, and not so long ago, either, when if you had enough strength of mind and enough indifference to the suggestive glances of lobby loungers and bell boys to try the front door, you were nevertheless forced to seek out the ladies' entrance, where there was no boy, no desk, no newspaper stand. You were expected to wait until the result of what looked like a surreptitious transaction was brought back to you and you were shunted quietly to a room.

The whole performance was made to seem positively illicit, but it was better than the stares and the insolence which you encountered if you passed through what was considered man's particular domain—the lobby.—From The Designer Magazine for November.

Sometimes we figure that just being married is enough to make any woman mad at her husband sometimes.

The fall leaves are so beautiful they seem almost as wonderful as those we colored in kindergarten.

People blame you for getting into a rut. Yet, along some roads the rut keeps you out of the ditch.

These danger signs you see on the highways should be put before many roadside restaurants.

Without a telephone and separated from her nearest neighbor by several hundred yards Mrs. Wilson at first was at loss what to do. Then she remembered her photograph.

A moment later a strident male voice sounded through the house. The thieves took flight immediately.
