OSAGE INDIANS MURDERER MAY BE REVEALED

Master Mind and His Aides, Sought Vainly For Several Years, Face Indictments.

By United Press. GUTHRIE, Okla., Jan. 2.—Fifteen sensational secret arrests in connection with the mysterious Osage Indian murders—styled the "Hyde" hand of terror of the Osage country—are expected to be disclosed here Monday. At that time a federal grand jury will convene and try to ferret out the malignant forces that have taken the lives of more than a score of wealthy Osage people. A number of men prominent in business are said to be involved in the evidence found by the government.

Charges of conspiracy are to be presented to the grand jury, and federal and state officers will go to Powhuska and arrest all persons said to be implicated. For years the hand of justice has been groping, faltering, almost losing that which was sought in the Osage hills. A "Jekyll" hand is believed to have directed the "Hyde" hand in the brutal murders for their money. The "Hyde" hand is now in the Leavenworth penitentiary, it is said, his identity hidden by the authorities. The "Jekyll" is not yet apprehended, but is said to be living in luxury.

Other unprincipled methods are laid to the mysterious blackguards, including perjury, poisoning, dynamiting, wife stealing and falsifying of records. History of the crimes dates back to the summer of 1922, when the robbery of Indians by the organized band of cut-throats had progressed smoothly, when suddenly the government proclaimed that Indian titles to oil lands should be prolonged to 1948. Within a short time a number of wealthy Indians had met mysterious deaths. State and federal officers worked on the case without any solution, but recently there have been fresh developments and it is announced that the hiring in the penitentiary has made a complete confession, through which it is believed the present arrests have been made possible.

One official has explained the situation thus: "The people are afraid of their lives; they won't talk. Both white men and Indians are afraid the malignant man will find out who dare to stand against him. It has seemed so with every investigation. Grand juries before have uncovered nothing. Charges in the federal court probably will be conspiracy to defraud and state charges of murder will be filed."

Welcome Showers Falling Over Texas, Farmers Rejoicing

Showers fell over Eastland county throughout Friday night, but held up Saturday morning. Showers began falling again, however Saturday afternoon and were falling up to midnight last night with indications they would continue through today.

Showers are what the farmers want throughout this part of Texas, and in other portions of the state, too, if reports are correct. When the rain comes down slowly it sinks deep into the ground and collects in underground pools and forms a reserve against the dry periods of the year. Many of the water pockets in Northern Texas have been somewhat depleted by the scarcity of rain in the last few months and can stand considerable refilling. Then, too, the winter wheat and oats need rain to give it a good growth and that is just what the slow and steady showers are doing. So the showers that have fallen during the last several days and the showers forecast for today and possible for several days this week are welcome by the farmers.

Dr. A. N. Harkrider Buys Ranger Property For An Investment

Purchase of the W. P. Davenport dwelling house property at 452 Pine street, Ranger, by Dr. A. N. Harkrider, is announced. The price has not been stated. The purchase was made, it is stated, as an investment. Only recently Dr. H. A. Logsdon bought the Garrett Bohning property at Biardell street and the Bankhead highway, and Dr. C. C. Craig bought the Howard Gholsen property at Wilson and Summit streets, both buying for homes. Dr. Harkrider owns his home on West Main street, near South Hodges, so his purchase for an investment merely confirms the feeling that appears to be gaining steadily that Ranger property is a good investment.

BIBLE THOUGHT

THE ROYAL LAW.—If ye fulfill the royal law according to the Scripture, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself, ye do well; but if ye have respect to persons, ye commit sin, and are convicted of the law as transgressors.—James 2: 8, 9.

PRAYER.—Dear Heavenly Father, we are all Thy children by creation; make us all truly Thine by regeneration.

MILLION DRUG ADDICTS.

This country, which does not grow one commercial poppy or coca leaf, uses eight grains of opium annually per capita, compared with one grain for Italy, two for Germany, three for England and four for France. Treasury records show that there are more than a million addicts in the United States, and other estimates run as high as two millions.

A recent survey of New York city showed that 60 per cent of the inmates of penal and correctional institutions in that city are drug addicts or peddlers. Last year assistant United States Attorney General Cram estimated that more than 40 per cent of all prisoners being convicted in federal courts were addicts and that the number is increasing.

The health officer of Chicago has found drug addicts to an alarming extent among the youth of both sexes and reports from similar sources from all parts of the country indicate the same conditions.

The death of Frank A. Munsey removes another of the few nationally known editors and publishers of the United States. For 40 years he struggled against odds that are familiar to most publishers, but won out through sheer grit and determination. He moved from Maine to New York in 1882 with less than $100 in cash and started the Argosy magazine—a weekly story paper for boys and girls. For several years he had many ups and downs that would have crushed the average man, but he persisted and when he died his newspapers and magazines were numbered by the score and his wealth by the millions. It was not a case of luck with him—it was fight every step of the way.

RANGER PLANT ENLARGED TO MEET DEMANDS

Clay Manufacturing Co. Incorporated in Order to Care For Increasing Business.

The Clay Manufacturing Company, capitalized at $5,000, with W. D. Clay of Ranger, S. H. Whittenberg of Eastland and J. S. Grisham of Eastland as incorporators, has been chartered to do business in Ranger and already has begun operations. The company takes over the plant and patents of W. D. Clay, who has been operating in Ranger for several years, and plans to enlarge and extend the business.

The company will manufacture the Clay perfected hot water and steam washing plants and tubular frame structure for bridges and buildings. Much of their raw material is right at hand in the form of piping and, as the demand for their product is said to be good, it is expected they will be able to build up a large business.

Eight of the Clay car washing machines are now in operation in Ranger, about 40 in Dallas and 30 in Fort Worth, according to Mr. Clay. "We have one or more of the machines in every leading city in Texas at this time," said Mr. Clay, "and because the demand for them has increased rapidly it became necessary to enlarge the plant."

Mr. Whittenberg has been a resident of Eastland several years, being heretofore in the employ of the Mogol Oil Corporation. He is an experienced worker in metals. Mr. Clay has just finished installing some new and improved machinery, so the company is ready to push the manufacture of its products.

ONCE A WEEK

There is one subject that never fails to interest men. Its length of women's clothes. The inch more or less on a woman's shirt has brought about more comment from men than any other subject known. Years ago a young girl was thought that "a lady never crosses her limbs" and she was taught to sit in a horse hair bottomed chair, with her little legs hanging off perfectly straight. There are very few of that generation that still follow the teachings of their youth. A few calamity howlers, take the vanishing inches as a yard of evidence that the world is going to the dogs—nonsense, it just means that women are getting more and more sensible and regarding the rules of health. Those women who have trailed long dresses through dust and mud, or have carried trains on their arms, look back and are aghast at such a silly fashion and glory in woman's emancipation. They also glory in her short locks. Short skirts and short hair are not the sign that women are growing immodest or mannish but they are the evidence of women emerging from centuries of man made habits and fashions, and yet no matter how much they change, there will always be a few men left to holler about woman's lack of modesty and to bewail the fact that all women kind are on the downward trend.

SPINSTERHOOD

BEGIN HERE TODAY.
Barbara Hawley is 25, self-willed and talented. Wanting to see life, she breaks with her fiance, Bruce Reynolds, an architect, and gets a job on the Telegraph.

She sees plenty of it at a roadhouse dinner, where Bob Jeffries, police reporter, introduces her to Jerome Ball, man about town. A prominent man kills himself at the dinner and Barbara picks up a red scarf dropped by his unknown woman companion.

Bruce enters the real estate firm of Manners, Stone & Reynolds, which launches an ambitious development, Vale Acres. Lydia Stacy, rich widow, is interested in him, but he rebuffs her and she tells Andrew McDermott, managing editor of the Telegraph, that she suspects crookedness in the firm.

Barbara, meanwhile, edits a love-lorn column and gives much advice to a correspondent who signs herself "Violetta" and asks how can she land a "socially superior young man." Suddenly she learns that Bruce has married a factory girl, Violetta Cranby—the same one she has been advising.

At this point Manners decamps with the bank deposits and Vale Acres goes to smash. Bruce is bitter against Barbara for the newspaper publicity that follows.

Barbara's mother dies and Barbara moves to an in-town apartment, sharing it with McDermott's daughter, Fancy. Fancy is in love with Jerome Ball, and Barbara, unable to argue her out of it, calls Ball in to talk to him. Fancy walks in unexpectedly and accuses her of trying to steal Ball for herself to avoid being an old maid. Then she runs out, but Barbara and Ball bring her back.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.
CHAPTER XXXVI.

The words were very faint. Fancy hung her head. Her breath caught. "Come in," said Barbara, "and sit down at the table. The tea is all ready. Of course you are hungry. I was hungry myself, but I couldn't eat. Perhaps I can eat something with you."

The dishes were brought out again and two cups of tea poured. Fancy sat on a kitchen stool, swinging her slippered feet and munching greedily. She did not meet Barbara's eyes.

When they had finished, Fancy drew her knees up on the stool and looked at Barbara. "Well," she said, putting, "let's have it over. Do your worst."

Barbara smiled at her. "Run back into your room, Fancy, and I'll follow you. But I haven't much to say." Fancy obeyed.

When Barbara came into the bedroom the girl was seated by the dressing table, her head on her arms. Barbara went up to her and put a hand on her shoulder. Fancy lifted her head and gazed into Barbara's face.

"Babs, dear," she whispered. "I'm so sorry. What a beast I was! And you'd been so good to me, too." The tears began to trickle again and she hid her face against Barbara's dress. "Now listen, dear," said Barbara. "We won't talk about that. You didn't mean some of the things you said. What matters now is that you see how right I am about Jerome. You mustn't ruin your life by falling in love with a man of his type. There's nothing in it for you. He is sure to drop you in a short time, as he dropped the other girl for you. Believe me, I know about him and his many loves."

"Why, Fancy, once he came over to tell me how worried he was about a breach of promise suit. You don't want to have anything to do with such a person as that, do you?"

"Did you drop him at once when you heard about it?" Fancy retorted.

Barbara flushed. "There was never any romance between us," she said, more distantly.

"Well, I don't care. It wasn't his fault the old thing sued him, was it?"

replied Fancy. "Lots of women just make victims of men that way. And I know Jerome wasn't to blame. He isn't that kind." Barbara sighed. "There's no use trying to tell you about him, Fancy," she said. "You think you're in love with him and you won't listen. But you must promise me one thing—that you'll tell your father all about it and do as he says."

Fancy shrugged her shoulders. "I'll tell him, but I don't know whether I'll do what he says. He's such a hard-headed old fogey, Babs. I'm old enough to know what I want."

"Mayoe so, dear, but not old enough to know what's good for you." "How do you live so contently, Babs?" Fancy's eyes were genuinely curious.

Barbara drew back, then recovered her poise. "What do you mean? Do you think an unmarried woman can't have any happiness?"

Fancy laughed. "Not exactly. But well you know, I'd think you'd want admirers and parties and pretty clothes and things. You're not so awfully old yet." The impertinence was evidently quite unintentional.

Barbara smiled. "Perhaps I do want them, dear. But my life doesn't provide them just now. And, after all it's my work that really counts. I have enough, just in it."

Fancy shook her head. "I don't see it. Women won't be made to work the way you do. Gee! I don't see how you stand it. Not for me, I tell you. I'm going to have all the fun I can and then I'm going to get married and go on having fun."

Barbara patted her shoulder. "And the best thing you can do in the meantime is to jump in a hot tub and then into bed. I'll let you sleep right through when I leave in the morning."

Fancy smiled quite happily and prepared to do as she was told.

When Barbara passed the bathroom door a few minutes later, she heard the strains of "Papa Love Mama" above the splashing of the water.

Later, she went into Fancy's room to turn on the lights and open the window. "You'll have that talk with your father, won't you, Fancy?" she asked, standing beside the bed.

Fancy's nose, shining from the hot water and soap, appeared from beneath the woolly blankets. "I'll tell him, Barbara, but I'm going to marry Jerome Ball, just the same. He asked me to last night."

The Vale Acres investigation dragged out for many weeks. Nothing was heard of Winston Manners.

The town was divided in its sympathies. As Barbara covered her daily beat, she heard varied opinions expressed regarding the culpability of Stone and Reynolds.

"Any man with normal intelligence must have known there was something wrong in that deal," argued one banker with a caller, while she stood waiting to talk to him.

The man whom he addressed shook his head. "That may be so of Stone," he said. "But young Reynolds never did have access to the books of the company, they say. His part in the deal was only drawing those folderols of foreign houses—all messed up with stucco and lattice work and dormer windows. Never cared much for that type of architecture myself. But he's supposed to be good in his line. I don't believe he paid any attention to the money side of the business."

When the man walked away Barbara approached the banker. "I think you're wrong about Mr. Reynolds," she said, quite irrelevantly.

McDermott was placing more confidence in her, giving her front page assignments frequently and relieving her of the routine work. The love-lorn column, however, he refused to take away from her. "You have a human touch in that column," he said. "And it's a great circulation builder."

Barbara smiled dubiously. Each day when she ran through the mail she picked up the pink and lavender envelopes and tore them open with feverish haste. And each time she sank back weak with relief against her chair. There were no more letters from Violetta.

Bob Jeffries came into the Telegraph office one day late in May. His eyes were shining.

He searched out Barbara as usual. Miss Badger watching, flounced away as she saw him approaching Barbara's desk, and shut her own desk with a vicious slam.

"What's up, Bob?" asked Barbara, smiling at him. "Have you found a diamond mine, or did your last baseball bet win?"

Bob perched on her desk, grinning. "Neither. Better than that. I've a chance to go to New York." He leaned back waiting for her to be impressed.

The effect was all that he could have desired. Barbara was visibly thrilled. "Oh, gorgeous! What kind of a job, Bob?"

"Publicity for the Ebber theaters."

he replied with nonchalance elaborately assumed.

Barbara's eyes gleamed. "The so glad for you." Her face fell. "But what in the world will I do for a side kick, Bob? You were going to be my knight and fellow traveler. Remember?"

Bob laughed. "Yep, I remember the picture-hanging contract. But really, Babs, you can't expect me to hang around this burg forever, on the chance that sometime you'll have a picture for me to hang. I have to go where fortune calls."

"He looked so like a pleased boy of 10 that Barbara could only smile, too. "Of course you must go," she said. "But how we shall miss you."

Bob raised his eyebrows. "Oh, I guess my going won't leave much of a hole. I'm not really very necessary to anybody in the world."

"Now, Bob, don't assume that high tragedy air. You know you're perfectly suited with this fancy free life of yours, and nothing would bore you more than being tied to anybody or any place."

Bob smiled. "Yep, you're right. I get sort of pale and melancholy over it sometimes, when I find a hairpin in my restaurant chicken pie or when I can't think of any place to go on Christmas night. But between hairpins and Christmas nights I'm happier than any married man in America."

The conversation was interrupted by a call to Barbara from McDermott. She rose and Bob strolled away.

"How's Fancy getting along these days?" asked the managing editor, as she entered his office. "I've been so busy this month I haven't given her the time I should."

"Well," said Barbara, "I think she's all right, though I've found her crying several times since Jerome stopped coming."

McDermott nodded his head. "Better cry now than later, when there isn't any remedy," he said. "She'll get over it."

"Oh, yes," answered Barbara, "and I don't think she's bitter about the matter. Never speaks of it. I've tried to take her mind off him as much as possible."

"She'll do," replied Fancy's father. "But what I called you in for especially, Barbara, was to ask what plans you had made for next month."

"Why none at all, outside the usual routine," said Barbara, in some surprise.

"How'd you like to go to the national convention of the General Federation of Women's Clubs?" (To be continued.)

Man Who Left Immense Fortune to City Likely to Be Buried in Potters Field

By MINOTT SAUNDERS (United Press Staff Correspondent)

PARIS, Jan. 2.—Theodore F. Ozanne, multi-millionaire benefactor of the historic city of Toulouse, died over thirty years ago and left all his vast store of worldly goods to loving neighbors and home institutions. They honored him with a funeral. They honored him with a funeral. They honored him with a funeral.

The god that men do is oft terrified with their bones, but the difficulty in the case of M. Ozanne is that he was never buried. Depleted keepers found his mortal remains the other day in an old-style coffin lying in a dark corner of the city morgue. Retuse was piled upon it and it was covered with dust. The fine finish of the rich oak was faded and gaudy. The golden handles were loose in their sockets. Not until the name was scratched from the name-plate did the dusty memory of one of the great benefactors recall the glory of M. Ozanne.

Born in Paris in 1814, M. Ozanne went to Toulouse at the age of 20 and took a humble position. He was an upright frugal man and soon began to gather wealth. He opened a department store and prospered. He had the soul of philanthropist, organized commercial and agricultural trust companies for mutual benefit, and helped his fellow citizens to better ways of life. During the hard times incident to the war of 1870 he saved many friends and neighbors from ruin by generous loans and helpful advice.

M. Ozanne took an active part in civic life, was a leading spirit in the Chamber of Commerce, director of charitable institutions and became maintainer of the Academie des Jeux Floraux. He saved the Academie, which is the oldest and one of the most famous in France, from decay by his generous gifts.

The beloved man died, Oct. 6, 1895. To honor him at his funeral the city stopped work and thousands attended the ceremony. His body was laid away in the morgue so that a fitting vault might be erected. Without relatives, he left his entire fortune of over 100,000,000 francs to friends in Toulouse, neighbors, public works and charitable institutions. All his bequests benefited the city directly or indirectly. But thirty years later his body was resting just where it was left after the funeral and nothing has been done to ward the vault.

Now the city faces a problem in the disposition of the remains. Regulations require that when a body remains unclaimed after resting in the morgue for two years it shall be placed in the common burial plot.

In her bed of marigolds was one bloom which went to seed, the head closing in over the seeds. They then sprouted, sending out new growth which in turn flowered, although in miniature.

Plants Have Hearts and Brains, Claims Noted Hindustan Scientist

CALCUTTA.—From the depths of his extraordinary "plant laboratory" on the banks of the Hoogli, Sir Jagadis Chandra Bose has stirred up widespread controversy—both scientific and religious—by this announcement that he has discovered in plants a heart and a nervous system which function exactly like those of man.

In addition, he hints that he has found evidence pointing to the existence of "brains" in plants.

To the devout Hindoo who will not eat the flesh of animals because animals have "souls," Sir Jagadis' announcement has come like a bombshell, for it tends to break down the distinction which has hitherto existed between plants and animals the conscientious Hindoo therefore faces starvation for if the new theory is correct, then a plateful of rice is a graveyard, and this he can not endure.

The controversy has deeply stirred the "vernacular" press and lengthy letters appear pro and con. In some circles the new theory has displaced politics and "swara" in absorbing interest.

But Sir Jagadis' scientific colleagues have noticeably withheld their verdict on his extraordinary discovery, if discovery it be.

Their complaint is that while Sir Jagadis has written many learned books and monographs on the problems of plant life, he has not yet informed his fellow scientists just how he has reached his astounding conclusions. They intimate that the truly scientific method is to submit the data freely to the scientific world before it is given to laymen. They suggest, in anonymous letters to the press signed "Veritas" and "Cautions" that the Bose institute—amply endowed by its wealthy founder, the scientist himself—should invite the leading scientists familiar with the field of "nervous irritability of plants" to investigate Sir Jagadis' researches and report to the world.

But Sir Jagadis, who is 67 years old, has concentrated on his favorite problem for the past 35 years; he now seems too absorbed in the wonderland he has found to listen to the controversy raging about him.

FOUR MAJOR GOLF TITLES CHANGE HANDS

Many Interesting Matches
Played During the Season of 1925.

By HENRY L. FARRELL,
United Press Sports Editor.
NEW YORK, Jan. 2.—Four of the major golf titles changed hands during a most successful season in 1925 and the other four championships remained in the same hands.

Bobby Jones, perhaps the most outstanding American golfer of the season, won the national amateur chamampionship for the second successive year and forced Willie McFarlane into a playoff in the national open.

In beating Jones in the "open," McFarlane succeeded Cyril Walker as the American champion.

Miss Glenna Collett, 1922 American woman champion, staged one of the most pleasing comebacks of the season and won back the title held in 1924 by Mrs. Dorothy Campbell Hurd.

Jim Barnes contributed further to American prestige in foreign competition when he won the classic British open championship and replaced Walter Hagen, the brilliant American, who carried off the 1924 honors.

Robert Harris became a new champion when he succeeded E. W. E. Holderness as the British amateur champion.

Walter Hagen, considered by many qualified critics to be the greatest money player in the world, retained his championship by winning the P. G. A. title.

Miss Joyce Wethered, who was declared by Glenna Collett as the finest woman golfer in the world, retained the British woman's title that she won in 1924.

Because of the heavy expenses involved there were no Walker cup matches in 1925, but the series between the British and American amateur teams are to be resumed in 1926.

Radical improvement in the college game was observed and the class has been lifted to such a prominent place by the number and ability of the competitors that it had almost a major national rating.

Fred Lamprecht, of Tulane, also a star player on the varsity eleven, won the championship and replaced Dexter Cummings, the 1923 and 1924 champion. Lamprecht was almost as good on the gridiron as he was on the links.

HOUSTON, Jan. 2.—Repurchase of the famous Bosque county ranch by former Governor Ferguson from Dan A. Jappet of Houston became known here Saturday. The consideration was $100,000. No actual money was passed, the former governor giving vendor's lien notes for the entire amount.
Jappet came into possession through a loan of $75,000 on the ranch, foreclosed by him in 1924. Ferguson has reclaimed the ranch from Jappet. The ranch contains 8,900 acres.

Tramp Printers Now Traveling Over The Country In Flivvers

By United Press.
INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Jan. 2.—The "tramp printer," despite common belief to the contrary, is not an extinct species, according to James M. Lynch, president of the International Typographical union.

The type has changed, that is all, and the old "tramp" who rode the brake rods and the blind baggage has given way to the modern itinerant printer who spins along in his auto, stopping and working where his fancy dictates.

"The fact is that more traveling cards are issued to members of the printers' union today than ever before," said Lynch. "The modern itinerant printer travels in his own auto or rides the cushion.

"Instead of telling the round-eyed apprentice boys of clashes with hard-boiled trainmen, wide-open gambling and the hardships of the frontier, the modern 'tramp' recounts the story of crossing the Rockies in his flivver and sleeping under the open skies.

"The printer, who began his travels when Father Faust's shop was raided by soldiers in the fifteenth century, will continue his roamings until the last form has gone over and the last editor has written 'thirty!'"

January Term Of District Court To Open Next Monday

District Clerk W. B. Collier has just finished making up the assignment of cases for the January term of Judge Elzo Been's court, which opens Monday morning, Jan. 4, at 10 o'clock. The assignment, which is now being sent out by the clerk to those attorneys who have subscribed for it, requests that all litigants desiring cases placed on the jury docket in the Eighty-eighth district court should do so during the first week of the term, so that demanding a jury will not work a delay or continuance of the case.

The week beginning Monday, Jan. 4, is jury criminal week, and on Tuesday of that week, at 10 o'clock, the appearance docket will be called and all cases appearing on same will be assigned for trial during this term of court.

Also on this day the cause of Eastland County vs. the City National bank et al. will be taken up, the court having been requested to have an audit of the bank's books made, and all parties are given notice to appear at that time to urge any exceptions or motions they desire.

JIU-JITSU CHAMPION SEEKS RING CONTEST WITH BOXER

ROME.—The European welterweight champion, Bosisio, who recently successfully defended his title against the attack of the Dutchman, Steenhorst, has received a challenge from the Italian jiu-jitsu champion, Franco Duranti.

The latter wants to use jiu-jitsu on Bosisio, while Bosisio is expected to defend himself under Marquis of Queensberry boxing rules.

A purse is to be put up, and the conditions offered by the jiu-jitsu man are as follows:

The bout to last five rounds with one minute intervals. Bosisio to wear six-ounce gloves, and not to use any blows considered as fouls under boxing rules, though he may hit the jiu-jitser from any position in which he may find himself. The jiu-jitser is to use only the attack grips and immobilizing holds as recognized under the jiu-jitsu rules. The victory is to be adjudicated on the following grounds: To the boxer if he gives his opponent the K. O., or makes him abandon; to the jiu-jitser, if he gets the boxer so that the latter cannot move. If either opponent is disqualified for irregular blows or grips the victory will go to the other.

FLYMAN FALLS FROM MILAN CATHEDRAL, BREAKING LEG

BOLOGNA.—"The flyman" as Francesco Tibaldi is known all over Italy, scales perpendicular cathedral walls simply for the plaudits of the crowd, and recently took the stage from Mussolini when the latter reviewed a blackshirt army in this city. The crowd, fascinated by the perilous feats of "the flyman" as he climbed over the buttresses and pinnacles of the church of St. Petronius paid more attention for a few minutes to Tibaldi than to the leader of fascism.

The police, however, soon got on the "fly man's" track, and arrested him for disturbing the traffic.

Seeing that his performances were not appreciated in Bologna, Tibaldi, who does his climbing stunts simply for the applause of the mob and for notoriety, went to Milan.

During an attempt to scale the Gothic pinnacles of the famous Milan cathedral, the "fly-man" fell and broke a leg.

BOYS THRILL COUNTY AFTER ROBBING STILL

By United Press. SUPERIOR, Wis., Jan. 2.—Finding of a moonshine still led Stanley Nicolski, 9, and Charles Smith, 10, into a lot of trouble. After finding the still the youths took several gallons of illicit liquor and from the money derived from its sale purchased two guns, a .22-caliber rifle and a 12-gauge shotgun.

Having tired of shooting out lights along main traveled highways, they got a thrill out of taking pot shots at passing motorists.

Louis Erickson, farmer, was shot in the shoulder and narrowly escaped being killed. He did not think much of it at the time, not having heard any report and believed it to have been a stray shot.

The affair was spread through the suburban community in which the lads lived and police following a tip, soon placed them under arrest.

They told their story to the authorities and were then turned over to juvenile authorities.

REVOLUTION IN CHINA URGED TO END CIVIL WAR

By United Press. SHANGHAI.—Denouncing China's latest civil war as designed toward further enslavement of millions of the lower classes in order to satisfy the greed of the militarists, the Wu Chang branch of the Kuomintang party has issued a stirring appeal for a people's revolutionary movement throughout China.

The appeal, which is in the form of a pamphlet, points out that the present is the third war between the Chihli and Fangtien military factions. "The motive of these frequent contests is simply private interest and greed for territory," the pamphlet says. "But we, the people, are oppressed and downtrodden and done to death."

The pamphlet goes on to urge a union of farmers, artisans, merchants and students throughout for the double purpose of opposing the present and all future civil wars and organizing a popular revolutionary movement.

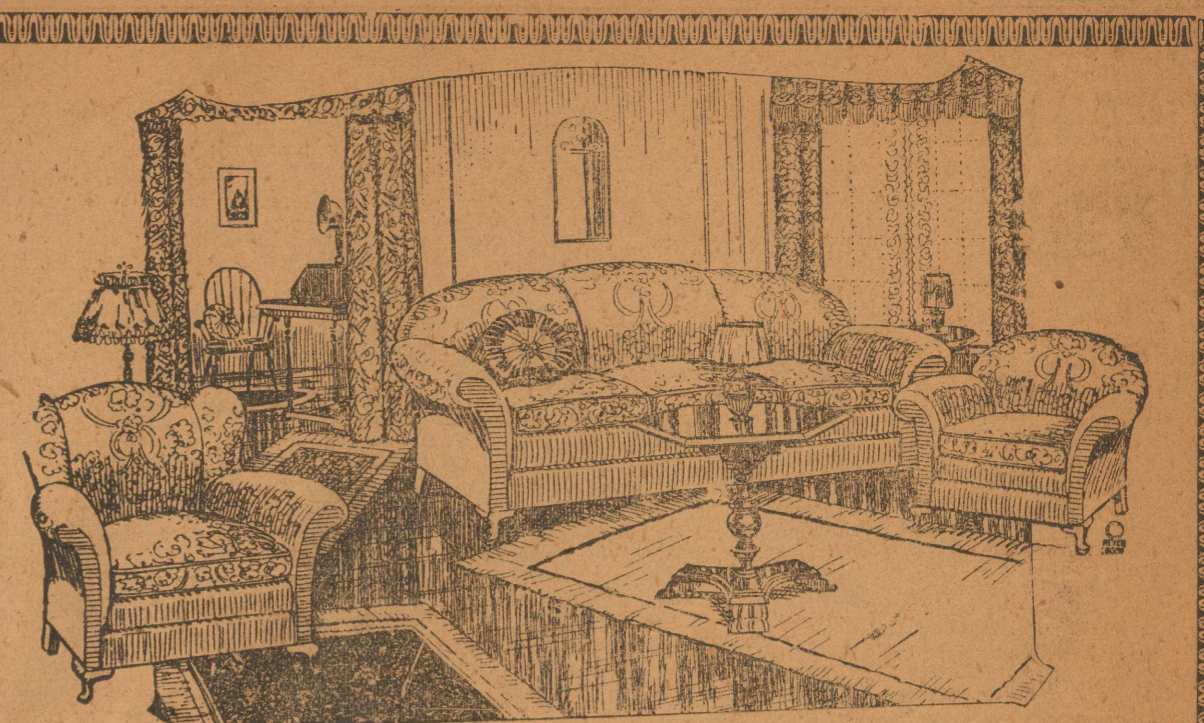

MISSOURI MINISTERS STILL HAVE HOPE

MOBERLY, Mo., Jan. 2.—The church is not "slipping" according to replies received from a questionnaire sent to ministers of this city, following the charge by Rev. Paul F. Arndt, of the Zion Lutheran church who declared Christianity here is losing its hold.

While the ministers agreed that they are up against sin in all its ramifications, they believed that the church would succeed in routing the forces of the devil as soon as a "proper amount of Godliness can be created in the homes."

While the preachers also believed that bootleggers, gamblers and brothel proprietors had conspired with some officers of the law, they do not believe that this is a general condition.

As secretary-treasurer of the Howard Shipyard and Dock Company, Jeffersonville, Ind., Mrs. James Howard has personal charge of 500 men turning out inland waterways craft at America's oldest shipyard.

U. S. CONTINUES TO HOLD FIRST TENNIS PLACE

Bill Tilden Recognized As The World's Champion. France Advances.

U. S. CONTINUES 24
By HENRY L. FARRELL
(United Press Sports Editor)
NEW YORK, Jan. 1.—Advancement of France to the position of the second ranking tennis nation was the bright feature of the 1925 season. The continued domination of the United States in individual play and team competition was not a feature because it has become a custom.

The United States again won the challenge round for the Davis Cup against spirited competition from the two young French stars, Rene Lacoste and Jean Borotra, and the Americans probably will continue to win as long as Bill Tilden and Bill Johnston are on their game and willing to play.

The French team got into the challenge round by defeating the strong Australian team, for several years the second ranking Davis Cup team. The Australians were so disappointed that they announced they might not be back for several years. They were also peeved because the tennis association would not accept an invitation to send a team of Americans to Australia.

Big Bill Tilden lived up to his reputation as the world's greatest player by winning the national championship again. The tournament could have been recognized as being for the world's championship as practically every ranking player in the world was entered.

In the men's class, the comeback of Billy Johnston, the popular little Californian, was one of the most pleasing features of the year. Johnston had a bad season in 1924. He lost his place as a singles player on the Davis Cup team to young Vinnie Richards and his friends grieved to think that he was through.

Preparing for the future when Tilden and Johnston will have to be replaced, the tennis association sent John Hennessy and Ray Casey, two youngsters, to the British championships at Wimbledon, and they made a very good showing.

The French influence at Wimbledon was pronounced as the two finalists again were the French youngsters, Lacoste and Borotra and Lacoste displaced his teammate as the champion. Borotra, one of the few ranking tennis stars, who seems to be forced to hard work outside the court, was not in his best form as he had had very little time to train or practice. He dashed over to this country during the winter and won the indoor championship and several times during the Wimbledon tournament he had to make a trip by air to Paris.

In the women's class, the big surprise of the season came when Helen Wills, the national champion, was defeated in an early tournament by Elizabeth Ryan, the former California girl, who returned to this country after having spent ten years in England. The match was played on a court so sloppy that Miss Ryan took off her shoes and the young American champion couldn't handle the soft, chop strokes of her opponent.

Miss Wills swept through the national championship in impressive style and had very little trouble retaining her title. Mrs. Molla Mallory the former champion, made a valiant attempt at a comeback but her tennis days seem to have passed.

The British woman's team successfully defended the Wightman Cup at Forest Hills by winning the third match of the series from the American team. The tennis association decided at the December meeting of the executive committee to send a team to Wimbledon next year for the cup and to send two ranking men players to represent this country in the British championships.

The return to form of Mlle. Suzanne Lenglen was also one of the features of the season.
