Miss Virginia Brookes entertained Wednesday night with a beautifully appointed buffet supper in honor of several of her friends who will depart for school in a short time. House decorations were cut flowers. After the supper was over the hostess passed around slips of paper, on which were subjects for after-dinner speeches, and the subjects as well as the speeches occasioned a lot of merriment. Games and contests were the diversion for the rest of the evening. Miss Brookes will go to the teachers' college at Denton; Emerson Thomas, Andy Waldorf and Bill Newhall will go to Georgia Tech; Paul Wolfe to Texas U; Misses Helen and Catherine Hall to S. M. U. at Dallas. The guest list also included Misses Azaline and Fannie Lois Cox, and Mr. Otho Stubblefield.

DAY OF PLEASURE.
Miss Ella Fau Jones, who has been the charming guest of Mrs. J. B. Stackable for the past two months, will doubtless mark Thursday as a red letter day in her life, for it was on the last Thursday she happened to be in Ranger, as she departs Saturday for her home in Kingsport, Tenn. At high noon, Mrs. Stackable entertained for her with a luncheon, which was in the nature of a birthday honor and a farewell luncheon. A red and white color scheme prevailed throughout the three courses that formed the menu, and was evidenced in all its appointments, the gorgeous floral centerpiece of the table, vieing with a wonderful birthday cake, with its twinkling candles. Covers were laid for Misses Ella Fau Jones, Glenna Arnold, Rita Davenport, Diana Harkrider, Mmes. A. N. Harkrider, Steve Gilbert, W. N. Cox, and the hostess.

Another pretty compliment paid Miss Jones was a matinee party, given by Mrs. W. N. Cox, immediately following the luncheon, when the party adjourned to meet again at the Liberty theatre to enjoy its coolness and be thrilled by that charming actress, Anna Q. Nilsson, playing with James Kirkwood in "Top of the World."

The end of a perfect day came when Mrs. A. N. Harkrider entertained with a picnic and a swimming party at Lake Cisco. The party motoring over early in the evening, enjoyed a swim and then partaking of a picnic supper. This party included Miss Jones, Rita Davenport, Glenna Arnold, Ray Calvert, Jimmie Rosenberg, J. C. Harkrider of Greenwood, La., and the hostess.

Today, a third sister, Mrs. W. H. Jones of Breckenridge, has joined Mrs. Stackable and Miss Jones, and the three sisters are spending the day in a farewell reunion, prior to Miss Jones' departure on the Sunshine, Saturday noon.

The FLAPPER WIFE

by Beatrice Burton © 1925 NEA SERVICE INC.

Gloria Gordon, beautiful flapper, marries Dick Gregory, a struggling lawyer. Her idea of marriage is fun and fine clothes, but no work or children.

Dick borrows Maggie, his mother's maid, to teach Gloria to cook. But she refuses to learn. Later Maggie leaves, disgusted with Gloria's "jazzy" way of living. Then Gloria hires Rangbald Swanson, although Dick tells her they can't afford a maid. She swamps Dick with debts for new clothes, and a new automobile.

Gloria goes riding in it with Stanley Wayburn, an actor. They are seen by Mother Gregory, who begs Gloria to mend her ways. Gloria pays no attention to what she says. She promises to lend $200 to Wayburn, who expects to go to New York to get a job.

Nor does she profit by the example of her friend, May Seymour, wife of Dr. John Seymour, who is snubbed everywhere because of her foolish love affair with Jim Carewe.

Dick becomes dangerously ill with pneumonia. He is nursed by Mrs. O'Hara, whose sister, Susan Briggs, is Dick's secretary. Dick recovers and one day while Gloria is alone in the house with him he attempts to kiss her. She repulses him.

Word comes that Mother Gregory has been rushed to the hospital for an appendicitis operation. Gloria sends for Miss Briggs to stay with Dick while she goes to the hospital.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY:

"No, no! Let me do it!" Gloria rushed across the room like a small whirlwind and took the instrument from his hand.

"Hello," she said nervously. To her relief it was not Stan's voice that answered.

"This is Maggie, ma'am," the grim voice at the other end of the wire said. "Will you please go up to the hospital right away? Dr. Seymour has just taken Mr. Dick's mother there to operate on her for appendicitis!"

Dick's mother! Gloria could scarcely believe her ears.

Mother Gregory with her bright eyes and the blown roses in her cheeks, was the last person in the world who looked like a hospital case.

"Mr. Dick's father is out of town," Maggie went on. "And I do think someone of the family should be at the hospital when they operate on poor Miss Gregory—Please don't let Mr. Dick know about it, ma'am. It might kill him the way his heart is, and all!"

"Of course, I won't," Gloria snapped, as she hung up the receiver.

But how to keep Dick from knowing about his mother. That was the question.

She couldn't go away and leave him all alone in the house, sick and helpless as he was!

And there was no one to stay with him. It was Mrs. O'Hara's day off. Rangbald had gone to the dentist and wouldn't be back before 5 o'clock.

Suddenly Gloria thought of Miss Briggs—Yes, she would have to ask Miss Briggs to come and stay with Dick in her absence. There was nothing else to do.

"That was my dad on the phone," Gloria fibbed to Dick. "He says my mother's sick and wants me to go over to the house right away—Would you mind if I phoned Miss Briggs to stay here with you while I'm gone?"

Dick considered.

"Oh, I can stay here alone, can't I?" he asked, after a minute's pause.

"There's no need to bother Miss Briggs."

"That's nonsense! You can't stay here by yourself!" Gloria cried. She picked up the telephone and called Dick's office number.

Miss Briggs' low, sweet voice answered at once.

"Could you leave the office for an hour or two, and come out here to the house?" Gloria asked her. "I've had some bad news from my mother and I've got to leave Mr. Gregory for a little while. It's your sister's day off duty, you know."

"I'll be there right away," Miss Briggs answered. Gloria was sure she could hear a note of eagerness in her voice.

"Did Miss Briggs say she'd come?" Dick asked.

"Did she say she'd come?" Gloria laughed with cutting sarcasm. "Oh, boy, did she! Why couldn't you get her away with wild horses! Her idea of a perfect time is taking care of you for an afternoon—You flip it from me, Ricky, she has a real crush on her boss! And don't you forget it!"

"Why don't you phone mother to come instead?" Dick asked, ignoring Gloria's remarks about Miss Briggs. "I'd rather have her. She hasn't been here for an age."

"Oh, she's not at home today," Gloria replied. "I happen to know."

She had a sudden vision of Mother Gregory in the white operating room of the hospital.

"I've got to hurry!" she said.

time I'm ever going to see you—or talk to you."

Stan opened the door of the car and tossed out his half-smoked cigarette.

"What's the big idea, Russet?" he asked, laying his arm around the back of the seat. Gloria leaned forward, away from it.

"You see, it's this way: I've been thinking a lot about Dick and you and me lately," Gloria tried to explain. "I know I couldn't go on living in the same house with him so long as I was thinking about you all the time—seeing you every day."

"Last night I made up my mind to leave and go to New York to get a job on the stage, but today when I looked at Dick I saw how much he needed me. Why, he's crazy about me, Stan! It would kill him if I

Years afterward, when Stanley Wayburn thought of her, he saw her as she was now—her eyes full of unshed tears, her soft mouth trembling.

"I won't see you again," she said briefly. "Goodby, Stan."

Wayburn watched her run up the front steps of the hospital, and disappear within its swinging doors.

"Along about day after tomorrow, she'll be calling me up again," he said comfortingly to himself. "I know women."

He turned down the brim of his hat, turned up the collar of his coat, and went away through the slanting gray rain, whistling "My Flapper Wife."

The combined smell of ether and carbolic acid made Gloria a little faint and dizzy as she walked through the hospital.

A fresh-cheeked nurse led her to a bare little room at the end of a long hall on the third floor.

"As soon as they bring Mrs. Gregory down from the operating room, I'll let you know," she said, and went away.

There was a pile of magazines on a fumed-oak table in the middle of the room. Gloria picked one up, and settled down with it, in an uncomfortable wicker rocking chair.

She turned the pages idly. Then she took off her hat and tossed it onto the table. She leaned back against the chair and went to sleep.

Gloria knelt down and put her ear to the crack of the door. She held her breath and listened.

"Here, put your arms into your bathrobe! And let me brush your hair—I must doll you all up for Miss Briggs!"

She straightened the covers of Dick's bed and laid the volume of Stevenson's "Vallima Letters" on his bedside table.

"There's your book," she said. Your darling Susy can sit here with her best bedside manner and read it to you all afternoon in her soothing sickroom voice—and you won't miss your Gloria a bit!"

And again she was surprised at the sharp pang of jealousy that pricked through her at the thought of Miss Briggs sitting there with Dick all afternoon.

"If there's anything I can do for your mother let me know," Dick called after her as she went into her own room to dress. His kindness was a reproach in itself.

How good he was to her! And she didn't deserve it!

Gloria was ready to go long before the doorbell rang.

When at last it did, Gloria snatched up her coat and ran downstairs impatiently.

"If I'd had any sense I'd have sent a cab for you. Time counts in a thing like this!" she said sharply to Miss Briggs as they went up to Dick's room.

Miss Briggs flushed. She knew that what Gloria meant was that if she had had any sense she would have hurried to the house in a cab herself!

She hit her lip and said nothing.

When she opened the door of Dick's room there was a radiant smile in her eyes.

"Good-by, you two," Gloria said, and was gone.

Gloria ran out to the garage and started the little blue roadster. Two minutes later it was skimming the shining wet pavement on the road to the hospital.

Gloria's heart beat fast as she neared the street corner that had become the favorite meeting place of herself and Stanley Wayburn.

Yes! There he was! Standing in the misty rain, smoking his everlasting cigarette.

He swept off his hat as Gloria headed her car in toward the curb, and stood bare-headed in the rain.

"For the love of Mike, put on your hat! Do you want to catch your death o' dampness?" Gloria asked, opening the door of the car.

"Jump in, and be quick about it!"

"If I'm going to catch cold, I've caught it now. You've kept me waiting there in the rain for almost an hour—do you know it?" Stan asked. He settled into his seat and shook the raindrops from his pearl-gray hat.

"I wasn't coming today at all," Gloria said.

"You weren't coming?" Stan repeated. There was surprise in his voice.

Gloria shook her head. "But they telephoned to say that I'd better go right over to the hospital. Mother Gregory's there to be operated on for appendicitis. I must hurry!"

She pressed her foot down on the accelerator, and the little car shot forward eagerly.

"I asked you to ride with me so I could tell you why I made up my mind not to meet you today," Gloria went on bravely. "This is the last went away from him! So I've made up my mind to put you right out of my thoughts and to be a good wife to Dick from now on. I owe it to him."

Wayburn interrupted her with an easy laugh.

"You can't put me out of your thoughts, Russet," he said. "You can chuck me out of your life, but you'll go on thinking about me just the same. I know women."

"Oh, I know you know all about women," Gloria answered bitterly.

"And two weeks after you've left—You'll have forgotten all about me. You'll have a dozen new sweeties. But Dick's not like you, Stan. I'm the only woman in the world for him. That's why I've got to stick."

She slowed down the car and drove up before the hospital where Dr. Seymour had taken Mother Gregory.

"Aren't you making a mountain out of a mole hill, Russet?" Stan asked, lighting a fresh cigarette. "I haven't hurt you. I haven't asked you to leave your husband for me. Our friendship's been just a flame where I could warm my heart."

"Oh, cut the poetry!" Gloria cried impatiently. "You know just as well as I do that we had no business ever seeing each other. There's no such thing as a harmless friendship between a married woman and a single man! No woman has enough room in her life for two men!"

"Well, don't get sore at me about it!" Wayburn defended himself. "It's not my fault that you're unhappy with your husband."

Gloria opened her eyes with surprise.

"Well, if that isn't just like a man!" she exclaimed indignantly. "All you've done for the last three months is to follow me around and make love to me at every turn. And then you have the nerve to tell me it isn't your fault that I'm unhappy with Dick? Why didn't you let me alone? I was contented enough until you came back to town."

Wayburn's lip curled in contemptuous amusement.

"I did let you alone, Russet," he said. "It was you who came to the theatre to hunt me up, if you remember. I knew what ailed you. You were bored with married life. You wanted something more exciting—more jazzy. You wanted a love affair with me. Now, be honest with yourself. Didn't you?"

He leaned forward and took Gloria's gloved hands in his.

"You're just a peppy young flapper, who got married too soon," he said. "You'll settle down after a while, and be a fine wife. You'll forget you ever knew me."

"Is that what you want me to do?" Gloria asked. "Now that you're leaving town, you're perfectly contented not to see again, aren't you? You want me not to bother you any more, don't you? You're tired of me."

"I'm not going for two weeks or more," Wayburn answered. "In the meantime, I want to see you just as often as you'll let me see you, Russet. And, let's not quarrel, any more. What's the use?"

Gloria opened the door of the automobile, and slipped out of it.

Gregory back from the operating room.

At last, Gloria got up and walked out into the hall. A few yards away from where she stood was another cart. From it came a tiny sound, like the cheeping of small hungry robins. She walked over to the cart. On it, with their little pink hands waving in the air, were four little babies tucked into a nest of soft white wool. Gloria looked at them curiously.

"Aren't they the cutest things you ever saw?" asked a gay voice behind Gloria. She turned to see the little fresh-faced nurse standing there.

RANGER, TEXAS

THE FLAPPER WIFE.

Mother Gregory lay on a narrow high bed in a white-walled room. Her face was colorless and covered with sweat. She snored through her parted lips. As Gloria stood looking down at her, she half-opened her eyes. Her lips moved. She was trying to say something.

Far Flung British Empire Cemented In Closer Union by Modern Science

By KEITH JONES,
United Press Staff Correspondent,
LONDON.—"England is done."
This is a phrase one not uncommonly hears in London; and often enough it is uttered by Englishmen themselves. It is inspired by the present post-war depression in business, widespread unemployment, and the threat of disastrous strikes in the coal and transportation industry.

But is England "done?" Is she not in truth, just beginning?

It is this view that farseeing British statesmen are beginning to take as they look at the future of the empire in the light of modern developments in science.

World Air Routes.
For the day is not far distant when air routes will link the farthest corners of the empire as closely in the matter of time as England, Wales and Scotland were linked a century ago.

Wireless will convert the world into one vast "whispering gallery" where the sheep herder in New Zealand, the farmer in western Canada, and the cattleman on the plains of Australia may listen in on concerts in London or debates in parliament, no longer feeling that he is an outcast in the wastelands of the world, but that instead, he is an integral part of a great empire whose hub he may reach at the most in a few short days of air travel.

Then, the loneliness of pioneering will largely have vanished, and with that barrier removed, statesmen look forward to an increased rapid colonization of the outposts of Empire.

Tropics Made Safe.
Nor will the humid tropics be any longer considered a bar to white man's habitation. The advance of medical science in rendering the whiteman immune from the fevers of the tropics will open to extensive exploitation the vast wealth of the empire's equatorial possessions. Electricity developed through the harnessing of rivers will lighten the burden of manual labor and add to the comforts of colonizing. The extension of irrigation projects already under way—and in some instances already completed—will open new great tracts to profitable agricultural development.

Statistics just published put the future white population of Australia at 70,000,000 and South Africa at 70,000,000. New Zealand may reasonably expect to grow to a population of 30,000,000 and Canada to 50,000,000. India alone, with its present population of 320,000,000 raised to a higher standard of living would offer a market vast enough to insure steady prosperous employment a great percentage of workers in the British Isles. China with 400,000,000 population is a vast potential market as yet hardly touched.

Viewing the Future.
All the present troubles of the empire unemployment at home, the burden of great war debts, restlessness in Egypt and India, occasional suggestion of coolness by the colonies—all these, important though they are—statesmen see as surface irritations only, viewing the future in terms of centuries rather than in terms of decades.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK

By E. R. Waite, Secretary Shawnee, Okla., Board of Commerce.

That John McHugh, president of the Mechanics and Metals National bank of New York City says:

That the great majority of Americans are moving ahead steadily, not only to permanently higher living standards and wider individual opportunity, but also to greater financial independence.

That business is going forward in more than normal volume, with people consuming more commodities than at any other time.

That a population of more than 110,000,000 people, enjoying the world's highest standard of living, must have vast quantities of goods to satisfy their simplest needs.

That even so, the country has come under the spell of intensive selling efforts with competition keen.

That more than ever, business is a "selling" proposition.

That the American public, peculiarly responsive to high power sales pressure and advertising methods, buys much of what is offered to it. That sales of goods on small down payments to people who later will be compelled to turn their purchases back because of default, are bad for business.

That the installment system of retail credit at base is sound and is contributing to individual welfare where circumstances make the assurance certain that indebtedness will within a reasonable time, be liquidated.

Credit, if properly directed, strengthens the country's structure and widens the people's opportunity.

For as empires go, the English empire is only in its infancy. Rome was venerable with age when she conquered England, yet Britain remained a colony of hers for a longer period of time than has elapsed since England made her first feeble efforts at colonization late in the fifteenth century.

It is true possibly that England has reached the end of her period of territorial expansion. But the period of colonial development is just beginning.

Britain Going Ahead.
It is because of this vision of what the future holds for the empire, that in spite of the debt under which the country staggers the government goes ahead making further vast appropriations for the development of essential industries over the period of their present stringencies.

England looks at the phenomenal growth of the United States and realizes what she lost by the mismanagement of the American colonies just 150 years ago. She does not intend to repeat that error with her present possessions if she can prevent it. That is why the colonies are not now spoken as "possessions" of the British empire, but as "partnerships" in it; why India and Egypt are not "vassal states," but "trusteeships" of empire.

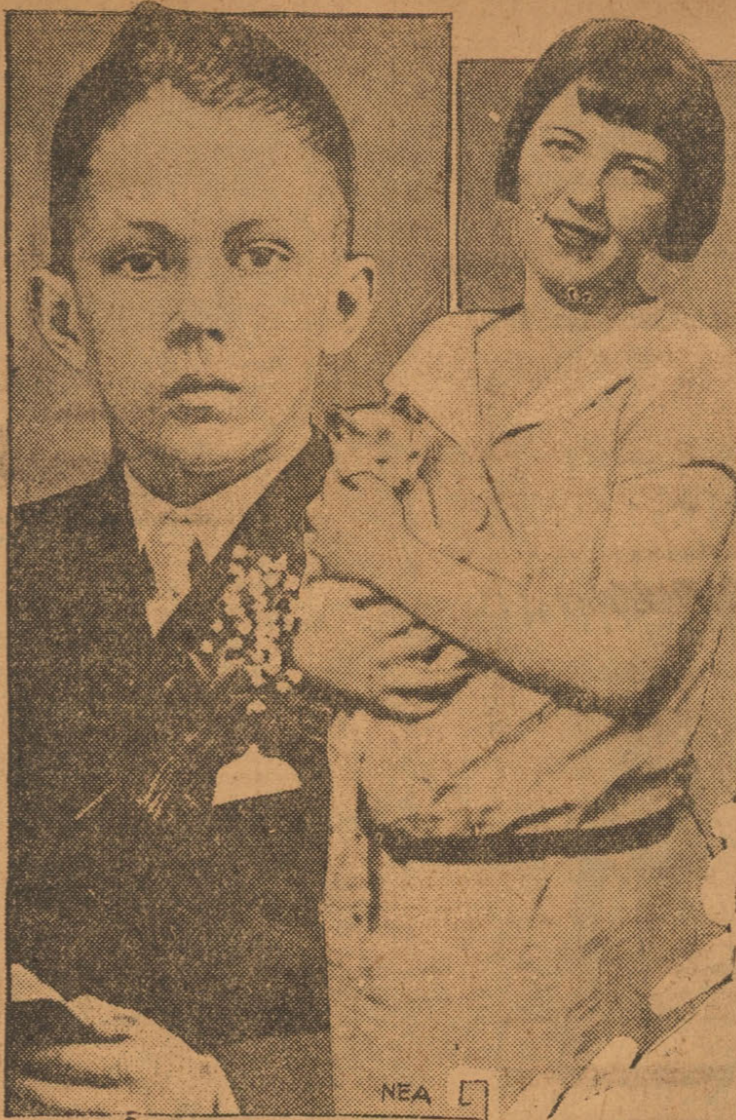

These parts of the empire are distant now; some are pulling this way and some that way; but the English believe that one of these days they will be welded by virtue of airplane travel and cheap wireless communication into a closer union. When that day comes they see the empire not as a loosely held "federation" of states and dependencies, but a closely knit nation of 600,000,000 or 700,000,000 people working together with a common economic interest, and possibly with a common intellectual interest as well.

BAND TO PLAY AT FIRES TO CHEER ON FIREMEN

SEYMOUR, Conn., Aug. 21.—The Nounawauk band has voted to become the official fire department band here and will attend all fires in full uniform to cheer the "smoke eaters" on in their work.

The fire department consists of the Citizens Engine company, a volunteer organization, and the band says if at any time the department is unable to cope with a blaze they will pitch in and help.

YOUNGSTERS OF 15 ELOPE WHEN PARENTS INTERFERE

Joe Medyke and his "Irish Rose," Hazel Mitchell

By NEA Service.
CHICAGO.—Life at 15 is a momentous episode!

Parents can't understand. They dub the bloom of romance as "puppy love" and threaten the rod and bed without success.

Thus reasoned Hazel Mitchell, 15, little Scotch-Irish girl when a week ago her mother and the boy's mother sought to separate her from her 15-year-old sweetheart of Jewish faith.

Today the Scotch-Irish and Jewish mothers look resentfully at each other across the back porch. For Hazel and Joe Medyke, the Jewish boy, have eloped—an Abie's Irish Rose affair in real life.

Affair Starts Early.
The Mitchells have lived in the house where Mrs. J. Sack, the boy's mother, is landlady for three weeks. It was either a case of "puppy love" or love at first sight for the youngsters, say both mothers.

Or then again they may have known each other before the Mitchells moved to the apartment.

In any event Joe was vamped good and securely. The second day of Hazel's residence there the affair was on.

Joe would whistle up the stairway and Hazel would come tiptoeing down. She would tell her mother she was going down to sit an hour with Mrs. Sack.

And while Mrs. Sack drank in the affairs of Cupid on the silver sheet at a nearby picture show, her son and the little Scotch girl held hands and promised eternal love in the seclusion of the Sack apartment.

"We thought we had it stopped," Mrs. Sack said. "For a whole week it was peaceful. My son went his way and the Mitchell girl went hers. Then I found my son writing a letter to Hazel. I stopped it straight off and hid the letter he had started. Then I found a note which Hazel left on the sewing machine for Joe. I called Hazel out on the porch and told her if she didn't stop this nonsense she and her mother would have to move."

And then it happened. But that didn't end things. An open window showed the route the elopers had taken. A letter from Hazel to her mother bid farewell.

While Hazel's mother is in tears, Joe's mother is optimistic. She thinks they are in the neighborhood, because someone has been raising the icebox.

"Joe has run away before, and he usually slips back to get something to eat," says Mrs. Sack.

Hazel's Farewell Note.
Here is Hazel's farewell note to her mother:

My Mother: I have run away, forgive me. I am nearly out of my head. Don't worry, because the good Lord will take care of me. The hypocrite downstairs (Mrs. Sack) has the note I wrote to Joe about the farm. Please don't worry. I can hardly write. I haven't a cent, but I will try to get work as soon as I can, and I will send you money for my care and keeping all these years. Oh, mamma, I don't want to go, but you would never forgive me. Don't send anyone to look for me. I may go crazy. You have been so good to me, but I have taken advantage of you. When I get tired of it all, I may give myself up to a home. Such people as the landlady is what makes the younger generation what it is. Your daughter, HAZEL.

Marry a blond and you won't notice hair in the soup, a brunet and you won't notice it on the steak.

After washing a piece of ice never hang it out to dry. Place it in a hot oven instead.

A few hatpins left in a new hat will keep it from being sat upon more than a second or so.

You may eat your cake and have it, too, by making two cakes.

Peach preserves will keep much better if placed in a closet where the children can't find them.

The first thing to do with a new car is wonder why the county doesn't fix the roads.

DEEP TEST WELL NEAR ROCKDALE NEAR COMPLETION

TAYLOR, Texas, Aug. 21.—Drillers of the Magnolia Petroleum company's deep test near Rockdale are expecting the well to come in at any moment. A depth of almost 4,000 feet has been reached. Work on this well was delayed several weeks ago when a large flow of water necessitated setting the casing in concrete.

The Webber & Averill well on the Amor Forwood farm, eight miles northeast of Taylor, is at a depth of 990 feet and the drillers are now setting the casing. It is expected that baling will begin on this well before the end of the week.

Drilling operations, halted some time ago due to lack of water, were resumed Tuesday on the Sims Oil company well on the Smith tract, southeast of Taylor. A night crew has been added to the drilling force at this well.

Washington Filled With Ex-Statesmen Now Practicing Law

By WILLIAM J. McEVOY (United Press Staff Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, Aug. 20.—Senators, representatives, cabinet officers and appointive officials of the government who for one reason or another have returned to private life are finding considerable solace and financial remuneration in establishing law practice in the capital.

The list of former lawmakers and government officials who are now practicing law in Washington is steadily growing. The capital is becoming popular as a permanent place of residence for many ex-statesmen.

Frank W. Mondell, former republican floor leader in the house and more recently a member of the war finance commission was the last former official to decide to practice law here and make the capital his permanent residence.

Profitable Law Practice Fortified with a first hand knowledge of the workings of the government and the various departments and commissions, ex-statesmen usually find little difficulty in establishing a profitable practice here.

No doubt in the case of nearly all former lawmakers and officials who are now practicing here the influence of their wives and daughters was a great factor in their decision to remain here.

Woman relatives of government officials are reluctant to alienate themselves from Washington's social whirl after their husband has been defeated for reelection or his term expires. So many of them exert all possible pressure on their husbands to remain in the capital and set up a law office.

Former Cabinet Officers 6 Among former cabinet officers who are now engaged here in law are: Secretary of State Robert Lansing and Bainbridge Colby and former Attorney General A. Mitchell Palmer and Thomas Watt Gregory.

Former Senators include: George E. Chamberlain, Ore.; Charles Dick, Ohio; Hoke Smith, Ga.; Thomas Gore and Robert Owen, Okla., and Charles Thomas, Col.

Mondell will join a number of ex-colleagues. They are, Philly Campbell, Kans.; James T. Lloyd, Mo.; J. Harry Covington, Md.; Charles C. Carlin, Va.; Swagar Shirley, Ky., and Timothy Ansberry, Ohio.

Former appointive officials who are now members of the Washington bar include: Joseph P. Tumulty, secretary to President Wilson; Danie Roper, former internal revenue commissioner; James M. Beck, former solicitor-general of the department of justice; Brig. Gen. Samuel T. Ansell; Beckenridge Long, an assistant secretary of state; Wade H. Ellis and Rush L. Holland, former assistant attorney general, and C. Bascom Sloop, former secretary to President Coolidge.

HOUSTON.—Sixteen-inch pipe line from Moody Gas company's fields in Refugio, Edna and Markham to reach here by December 1st, supply 48,000,000 cubic feet of natural gas daily.

PLAINVIEW—One hundred blocks of short streets to be paved shortly.

Menus for the Family BY SISTER MARY Breakfast—Berries, cereal, thin cream, poached eggs on graham toast, milk, coffee.

Luncheon—Bacon and tomato toast, lettuce sandwiches, cottage cheese pie, milk, tea.

Dinner—Creamed salt codfish, baked potatoes, buttered new beets, cabbage salad, vanilla sponge with chocolate sauce, rye bread, milk, coffee.

Although the younger members of the family cannot indulge in the cottage cheese pie the pie is so delicious and out of the ordinary that the recipe is included. For a family of adults and older children the dish is nourishing and with a salad and sandwich makes a meal.

COTTAGE CHEESE PIE Three eggs, 1-2 cup light brown sugar, 1-4 teaspoon salt, 1 cup cottage cheese, 1-2 cup dried currants, 1 lemon (grated rind), 1-1-2 cups milk, 4 tablespoons powdered sugar, plain pastry.

Beat yolks of eggs until thick and lemon colored. Beat in sugar, salt, grated lemon rind and milk. Add cheese and currants and fold in the whites of 2 eggs beaten until stiff and dry. Turn into a pie plate lined with pastry and bake until firm in a moderate oven. Beat white of remaining egg until stiff and dry on a platter using a wire whisk. Beat in 2 tablespoons of powdered sugar and fold in remaining 2 tablespoonfuls. Pile on pie and bake eight minutes in a slow oven.

The oven should be hot when the pie is put in to bake the crust then the heat is reduced to bake the custard more slowly.

DON'T EXPERIMENT WITH 'PIMPLE CURES'

Do you think so little of your delicate skin and face as to allow yourself to become the subject for experiments. By all means use only the thing which has stood the test of time and public opinion to get rid of your pimples, blotches, bumps, "breaking out," eczema, etc. Black and White Ointment and Soap, have not only stood this test, but you are sure of it—when you know that they are selling at the tremendous rate of more than two million packages a year.

The way they are economically priced, in liberal packages, has helped to make them so popular along with their dependability. The 50c size Ointment contains three times as much as the 25c size. All dealers have both Black and White Ointment and Black and White Soap, as they are called.—Adv.

MARCEL WAVE FOR MEN CLAIMED GROWING FAD

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Aug. 21.—Marcel waves for men are on the way. Local beauty doctors, that is some of them, say man is gradually approaching the time when he will spend hours with electric curlers on his hair.

Otto DeDonato, one of the beauty culturists of the city says: "Certainly men are taking to marcel waves. In fact, only last week I put a marcel wave in the hair of an elderly gray-haired man. Marcelling for men has been the fad in Europe for some time. Our male ancestors back in 1776 wore their hair curled. I expect the fad to increase rapidly."

But there are a few of the beauty doctors who remember back when "men were men" and a beauty shop meant a "shave and haircut." S. A. Sperber is one of these and his terse comment on permanent waves for men is:

"It isn't right. If those cake eaters come to me I'll tell them to go roll their socks. What a fine fellow a man would be with a marcel wave." But despite Sperber other beauty doctors say that fall will see many men wandering in for a weegly marcel or six monthly permanent.
