WASHINGTON BY GEORGE DURNO

The inside story of how that bloody truck strike in Minneapolis was settled in a hurry. It makes an especially good Labor Day yarn. If you will recall, there really were two strikes and plenty of rough stuff was pulled in both.

Here's the lowdown on events which led up to that eventual armistice. Olson, as America's only Farmer-Labor governor, naturally is a champion of organized labor. He looked into the Minneapolis truck-drivers' grievances and decided they were in the right.

Then, day by day, the pugnacious governor thought up new methods of Chinese torture to inflict on the balking employees. Only trucks licensed by the National Guard could move—and Olson saw it to that vitally essential licenses weren't issued.

Finally, Olson revived a defunct farm marketing cooperative. He took over a downtown area normally used for parking autos and turned it into a market place to which the farmers could haul their produce and sell direct.

ORTHODOX ECONOMICS NEEDS HUMANIZING

It would be a lot easier to figure out how successful our present recovery efforts are likely to be if we only had some way of telling just how exact a science orthodox economics really is.

According to the old school economists, recovery from a depression must follow certain natural laws. There must be a deflation long enough and severe enough to readjust all the relationships of prices, wages, and debts, which were put out of line by the previous inflationary trend.

Until that readjustment is complete, we are told, there is no possibility of recovery. Now the reason why people are refusing to wait for these natural processes to do their work is that a terrific price in human values must be paid.

This bulletin asserts that recovery cannot come until wages have been deflated to a point at which industrial operation is profitable under a deflated price scheme. Such deflation, it says, is being retarded by present government relief policies.

TIGER ISLAND

Chapter Five DIFFICULT MEETING

"I don't understand," said the voice, "how you dared to run away in the first place; but once having run away, I don't understand how you dared come back. Haven't I shored you and guarded you? Haven't I kept you away from evil, and evil away from you?"

At this point the daughter began to be personified. She was called by her name.

Her name attracted him. The face of a young woman by the same name was said to have launched a thousand ships. "Now don't stand there," said the voice, "and tell me that you've been robbed."

Then there was silence. It seemed as if the silence was going to last indefinitely. Surely, though Bowers, the young woman has had time to calm down. He struck the tent flap sharply a number of times with his open hand. Then he said loudly: "May I come in?"

There was no immediate answer; and thinking that neither his voice nor his hand-clappings on the canvas had caught the attention of those within, he pulled the flap gingerly aside and poked his

Bowers was delighted. "By George," he said, "that's a big load off my mind. Can you put me in touch with him?" Again, before her answer came, there was hesitation. Then she said slowly: "Yes, I can; but I won't." She could hardly have made the statement more rudely. If Bowers was quick to be attracted, he was equally quick to take offense. He felt a little as if his face had been slapped. "If you won't, you won't," he said coldly; "and thank you very much for practically nothing." And he turned on his heel. "Just a minute," said the young woman. "I didn't mean to be rude." Bowers affected amazement. "What," he said, "you didn't? Well, you had a tremendous success without trying."

"I've got a cargo of animals washed on me," Bowers said.

"Helen, Helen, Helen," said the voice, "how could you? How could you run away from the mother that loves you so, and stay away three days and nights? Here it seemed as if Helen must have made some remonstrance. If so, the sounds of it were inaudible to Bowers.

"What's that you say?" said the mother. "Innocent? Guilt is written in every feature of your depraved little face. What have you done with your clothes?" During this harangue Bowers had formed a mental image of Helen.

head cautiously into the tent. The tent did contain a pretty young woman, or should we say, a beautiful young woman; and she was fully and even elaborately clothed. For the rest, the tent contained five great animal cages which were empty. The iron-barred doors were ajar.

Some pieces of cheap and gaudy luggage formed a group. A doll-sized trunk was open. A red suitcase, no bigger than a woman's vanity bag, stood beside the trunk. The pretty, or perhaps beautiful young woman, stood in the midst of the tent with a small female monkey of the Rhesus species in her arms. The young woman had hair of the color of quality known as platinum; and to the experienced eye of Bowers, she had the look of a young woman who knew her way about and who had been hardened and sharpened in the school of experience which is the result of economic pressure.

She was dressed in one of those showy uniforms which, unknown to the armies of the world, are affected by animal trainers. It was white and profusely decorated with gold buttons and gold braid. The well-cut breeches and boots were also white.

The boots had gold tops. Her subconscious mind had probably had some record of the slapping on the canvas and Bowers's request for admission, for she now turned her head slowly and looked at him. The young man, who was by no means shy, chose to interpret this look of blank non-recognition as an invitation, and he entered the tent, begging her pardon, as he did so.

Knowing what is to be expected from the average young white man in the tropics, and from the old ones too, for that matter, the young woman's attitude, if not belligerent, was cool and noncommittal. "Looking for someone?" she asked. Bowers, respectful, charming and disarmingly, came closer. Where women were concerned, he always took great pains to get himself liked, and was not accustomed to difficulty.

"I have had a cargo of birds and animals washed on me," he said. "I am taking them to Singapore for a friend, and I don't know beans about taking care of them. I thought that maybe you might know of someone, an expert, someone to take care of them. feed them, make them happy. There is a good piece of money in it," he went on, "and return passage. Know of any man that fills the bill?" After a little hesitation, the young woman said: "Why yes, I do."
