stances across the country where vaccine has been privately obtained. Something apparently is out of kilter with the distribution system of this currently vital commodity.

We think it's a doggone shame that a kink has developed in the vaccination program, and the kiddoes may not be able to get their second shots before school is out.

If that proves to be the caseand it apparently will-it will he hard to pick up where the first shots left off. It was recommended that the booster shots follow at a two-week interval. That time has come and gone, but no vaccine has arrived.

The writer has some rather stuffy notions about the polio vaccine, like a lot of other things. Item one is that he does not endorse any state-or federally-administered program to give more free shots to the "needy."

People just don't behave like people when somebody starts trying to give something away. Just you watch. If we believe we are "entitled" to free vaccine from our state or federal government, we have already sold ourselves over to socialism.

We like the way a fellow to whom we were talking the other day put it: "What's the use of a man ever working at all if he doesn't have the privilege of getas polio protection for his family?"

And another stuffy notion: Although we heartily endorse the work of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis and the March of Dimes and all that goes with it, we think the threat of infantile paralysis has been overplayed.

A physician with whom we conversed a week ago pointed out to us that there are other diseases far more dangerous to men and Plains farmers from several

We've been downright careless about weather predicting obligations lately, we'll have to admit. If possible, we'll try to arrange conferences with all the amateur prognosticators and bring you up to date on the weather.

One thing that we always have liked about living in Farwell is that almost unbroken string of sidewalk running some eight blocks down the west side of Third Street.

In towns such as this, where growth is often haphazard and unregulated, it is rare to find instances of this kind. Although tree roots in some places have warped the walk, it is very nearly a perfect ribbon from the "silk stocking" residential district to Main

THE TRIBUNE'S EDITORIAL COMMENT

For Man, Love of Car Is Greater than Love of Self

Much has been spoken and written through the centuries about man's eternal instinct for survival-and the high esteem with which he always has held himself.

However, there seems to be something in this modern world that man worships more than himself; his automobile.

If this seems like a strong statement, consider the stark facts. Don't you find it astounding that a man, blessed by nature with the most wonderful machine ever invented, his body, will give much more care and attention to his car than to his physical self?

If you are not objective enough to admit this quickly, then notice, if you please, how a man will buy nothing but the finest grades of gasoline and ubricants for his car, yet force his body to subsist on a diet of coffee, alcohol, tobacco, fried potatoes and pickled pig's feet!

He'll rush his car to the best mechanic in town at the sound of the slightest knocking in its engine, yet he'll nurse along a raw throat or a sore back until he is near a state of collapse.

He wouldn't think of missing a 5,000-mile check-up for his car, but he'll drive himself 14 hours a day for months at a time, and won't have himself checked over until he has one foot in the

If his car lights won't dim, or if one light burns out, he'll have it fixed within 15 minutes from time of discovery, but he'll go around for years running into things and being unable to read anything farther away than 20 inches because of nearsightedness.

There are lots of other ways in which you but perhaps you get the idea by now.

If Co-Ops Have Tax Advantage It's Nobody's Fault but Yours

In recent months a great amount of space in newspapers and magazines, and considerable time on television, has been devoted to the subject of co-operatives and their "tax advantages."

How to get safe, dependable, trouble-free electrical protection is being explained by John Dwyer, Vocational Agriculture teacher, to Donald Mansel. The various fuses may look alike but each one is designed to protect either an electrical circuit or an electric motor of given capacity.

saws, drills, grinders, and sanding machines, both portable and stationary, are coming equipped these green wire protruding.

This terminal, usually a green covered wire that protrudes from the plug, is another type of ground used on some electric equipment. This ground should be connected to a water pipe or the conduit of the wiring system, if it is properly grounded.

operator of the power tool is completely safe in the event of insulation becoming worn or broken and the bare wire touching the frame of the motor. Current which might ordinarily energize the equipment will, instead, travel along the safety "ground" and be dispelled without harm. This will be so even if the ground or floor on which the operator is standing should be wet. If your present farm power tools do not have the third wire for groundhave him run a grounding wire for you so that tools may be plugged in

Below is plug and outlet available for installing a grounding wire on your existing 115 volt single phase electric powered tools. The third terminal carries the electricity to ground, if the equipment should become energized due to worn insulation

John Dwyer, Vocational Agriculture Instructor, Groom, Texas, observes as students of Vocational Agriculture operate properly protected electric power tools. The wiring system is planned and adequate to supply the motors with sufficient electricity. All of the equipment has grounding protection. using the new three-prong plugs. (See accompanying photos).

While your electrician is installing your grounding system, ask him to check overload protection for your motors. Electric motors, while relatively inexpensive, do cost money and they should also have their share of protection from overloading.

A good example of a farm workshop which provides both operator and motor protection is the Farm Shop of the Vocational Agriculture Department, Groom High School, Groom, Texas. Under the guidance of John Dwyer, the instructor, this shop has been adequately wired, the electrical powered tools have the proper overload protection, and proper grounding convenience outlets are used. All wiring is in metal

These and other safe practices mean that this shop is a safe place for the students of Vocational Agriculture to work and learn how to use the tools that make farming more profitable. Your farm shop can be just as safe.

This type of electrical plug is found on the new "Electric Farm Power Tools". The third terminal is for the grounding wire that connects the motor to the ground in

Not One Line, But BOTH DRY AND GAS

When we went into the fertilizer business, we went into it with a company that supplies a complete line—PHILLIPS.

AGRICULTURAL AMMONIA—with 82% available nitrogen, this popular gas-type fertilizer stimulates rapid plant growth.

AMMONIUM SULPHATE—21% nitrogen, this is one of our most popular dry-type fertilizers.

AMMONIUM NITRATE-33.5% nitrogen, prilled dry-type fertilizer.

Farming With Irrigation? Then You Must Have Fertilizer!

You may have heard Dr. A. W. Young of Texas Tech who spoke at the soil conservation field day two weeks ago. He had some good tips, including many dealing with irrigation. Dr. Young pointed out that farmers who first get acquainted with irrigation notice after two or three years that yields start tapering off noticeably, even though we really "pour the water on."

Instead of watching your yields taper as you deplete your soil, why not undertake a soil management program that will keep your soil at a high level of fertility at all times? See us for an economical way to do this. It's a good investment!

NEWS FROM THE

By RAYMOND EULER

According to Les Bruns, Parmer mittee made a real impression on those in attendance at the Bushland Experiment Station on April 28th. Participating in the panel discussion led by County Agent, Joe Jones were Les Bruns, Bruce Parr, and Gilbert Kaltwasser.

Bruns told about the origination of the committee within Parmer County Farm Bureau last year, out lining the discussion of the increase of bindweed, in particular. Parr reviewed accomplishments of the bute to the Christian Rural Overcommittee last year, with particular emphasis on cooperation of promise of Santa Fe Railway Officials in relation to right of ways.

Kaltwasser outlined aims of the committee for continuing the program for this year. Plans are being made to secure sodium chlorate in wholesale quantities for those farmers who wish to make a real effort to eradicate these noxious weeds this year.
