Great Day Arrives For First Graders

Of course, there's teacher, who, to the beginner, seems to be the center of all the confusion. She's busy collecting scissors that won't be needed, and "Johnny first grader" is quite perturbed as he unwillingly hands over the new scissors purchased especially for this occasion.

Twelve years from now the same children will be walking across the platform of the auditorium to receive diplomas and merits of award. As Johnny senior gazes out into the audience with an air of "having learned it all," he'll wonder why he was ever afraid of that teacher.

And so it goes. From year to year Johnny will have learned what school really means. He'll have good times and bad to remember, but he'll mostly remember that very first day he started to school.

After observing the activities in one of Farwell's first grade rooms, the above mentioned actions were noticed. Teacher of this group reported later that they were behaving very nicely and that they were really cooperative.)

Kepley, Robert Rundell, Thad Watkins, Drew Watkins, George Magness, Willis Magness, Ed Meeks, Conda Jones, A. L. Tandy, Isham Guber, Frank Ayres, Ed McGuire, Jim Perkins and Lee Suddarth.

Foster is survived by his wife, Maggie; two sons, C. Ernest of Clovis and Bill of Farwell; two daughters, Mrs. Pearl Grissom, Bovina, and Mrs. C. C. Christian, Farwell; 27 grandchildren and 37 great-grandchildren and several great-great grandchildren.

A son, Tom, and a daughter, Agnes Florence, preceded their father in death.

Foster had lived in Parmer County for 36 years. He and his wife were married in Calico Rock, Ark., February 21, 1892, and had recently celebrated their 63rd anniversary.

After their marriage, the Fosters farmed in Arkansas for a year, then moved to Collin County, Texas. The couple and their tiny baby were on the road 21 days in a covered wagon. The trek was in December and the family got pretty cold on their journey. They carried all the Foster belongings in the conveyance, which was drawn by three mules.

In Texas, the family farmed near Weston, then moved to Oklahoma where they lived for 21 years. When the territory there became more heavily populated, the family moved to West Texas for a "free breath." They made their home in the Oklahoma Lane community, south of the small home where they had resided the past few years. When the pioneer couple first moved to Oklahoma Lane, there was no church in the community, and they helped organize the first Sunday School. They worshipped in a half dug-out, with logs for benches. Foster was a charter member of the Oklahoma Lane Methodist Church.

Mr. and Mrs. Jones have toured Colorado and the Rockies, Yellowstone National Park, Glacier National Park, and were in Washington when LaMoine heard from them last week.

Her mother wrote, "I'm in Portland, and I'm lost, and I don't care." Mrs. Jones had gone window shopping in town while Mr. Jones had the car washed. She got lost, but it didn't upset her in the least.

We guess they got together somehow, as they had plenty of time. My, what a life!

The paper two weeks ago that had the story about the Watson seed farm east of Lariat produced a demand for extra copies that we haven't had in a long time.

So this week we have a little follow-up on seed growing, which we hope you'll find interesting.

Walter has been very cooperative, and seemed not the least upset about our saying that he bought the farm from Shorty Hughes (it was Shorty Edwards), which was something we knew but just put down wrong when we wrote the story.

An interesting sidelight on the operation of the Watson Seed Company is that they have just finished planting corn at Wes-laco in the lower Rio Grande Valley. It will be harvested just before Christmas.

The seed stock from this planting came from this year's crop at the Garland nursery.

And to top it off, while the planting was going on at Wes-laco, a crop was being gathered at Pearsall, south of San Antonio.

Some wag, who preferred to remain unidentified, called up to tell us that we misspelled Taiban four times in one story that appeared on the front page last week.

He accused us of doing it on purpose so we could claim we don't know anything about the place.

Registered and Certified Seed Production Sure No "Cinch"

Raising grain sorghum for a cash crop under irrigated conditions is considered a fairly rigorous and exacting job by thousands of High Plains farmers, but the truth is, "they ain't seen nothin'" until they view the complications that certified seed growers run into.

The seed farm of Walter Watson which is three miles east of Lariat is a good example. A visitor to the farm who is unfamiliar with the processes used in producing certified grain sorghum seed would be surprised at some of the things he would see.

Probably the most striking view on the farm at this time is the sight of thousands upon thousands of brown paper bags which have been tediously slipped over the heads of the grain and clipped securely in place.

This process is known simply as "bagging," and is performed for the purpose of insuring the purity of the seed. As the grain is self-pollinating the bag serves to insure that pollen from no other plant nearby interferes with the controlled reproduction processes.

The bagged seed is known as "registered" and is considered to be a year better than standard certified seed. It is from the registered seed that next year's certified seed will emerge.

Last week, workers at the Watson farm bagged two acres of Plainsman variety grain sorghum, and used 20,000 of the small sacks which look as if they were intended to be used for popcorn.

Six workers were required for the laborious project, and their work was carefully timed to protect the heads as the stage arrived where pollen was beginning to form.

As the heads do not all mature simultaneously, only a part of the heads are bagged in this operation.

In about two weeks, the sacks will be split, and forced down the stalk where they will have served their purpose, except for identifying for harvest hands which heads have been so protected.

Harvesting, incidentally, is quite a piece of work in itself. The bagged heads are cut by hand and taken from the field to be threshed separately from the remainder of the grain.

Then, the unbagged grain is combined in the conventional manner.

It's quite an interesting departure from the typical cash-crop operations of the Plains with which most people are familiar.

This Plainsman grain sorghum on the Walter Watson farm has been specially bagged in an operation to produce registered seed. Below, John Range, employee on the farm, shows a close-up of the special brown paper sacks which are treated with an insecticide to protect the plants.

MR. IRRIGATION FARMER: WILL YOU PLEASE HELP US

Because there still are some irrigation well operators in Parmer County who are operating their wells in such a manner as to cause hazardous road conditions, water in bar ditches, interference with school buses, mail routes, and farming operations of others, the Parmer County Water Board feels it is necessary to call attention to the laws under which our Water District operates.

It is the viewpoint of the committee that our water problems can be worked out democratically and through education, for the reason that we all have mutual interests in this matter. However, it is the duty of the Board to call to your attention the laws of the district which provide court action for the elimination of the conditions mentioned.

We will appreciate your attention to this matter, and trust that we can control this situation on a voluntary basis. Still, the interests of all the users of the District must be protected. It is suggested that you exercise care to see that your irrigation water is not wasted.

Respectfully,
