Official Warning
Sheriff Jess Slaughter and County Attorney W. S. Morrison joined in declaring a policy of watchfulness against sale of all alcoholic beverages from beer to whiskey. The liquor control board, through District Director L. E. Morris, reiterated its statement that licensee or permitees can no longer sell li-quor in this county.

Officers said that package store DEAN IS GAUNT shown utmost cooperation in clos-ing out their sale of liquors. The sheriff's department called license holders Monday morning to remind operators against attempting sale of any alcoholic beverage.

Open To Seizure Morris said that stocks were due to be cleared Monday or else be open to seizure Tuesday by board agents. Only way for operators to regain stocks thus seized is through procedure in the district court.

Some four-score beer and whiskey dealers in the county were to surrender their licenses to the dis-trict office of the liquor control board here, Morris said. County Judge Charles Sullivan indicated that the county would take action on refunding permit fees when the licenses had been surrendered to the state. The city commission like-ly will take definite action on its refunding policy at its next meet-until the pressure of other legisla-tion forces proponents to shelve it. Some administration senators, however, forecast that night sessions would be ordered soon, and that such a step would cause the filibuster to collapse. A few even talked of limiting debate,

Senator Barkley of Kentucky, the Democratic leader, emphasized that "the administration is not taking sides" in the anti-lyachine bill

Modern Miss Copies Grandma's Underthings W. B. Winn Is Host

AP Feature Service Writer
There is an old-fashioned slant to the new-fashioned lingerie of the girl of 1928.

Next to the skin, Judy O'Grady and the Colonel's lady, sisters in modernity, are using costume tricks that grandmother used to

They go skiing in woolen under-wear, sleep in long-sleeved night-dresses, dance in cotton pettleoris, wear girdles that give them a laced-in look—and the most mod-ern of them are threading ribbons ern of them are threading ribbons into their lingerie again.

Back To Curves

It all begen with two things—the trend back toward feminine curves and the modern girl's determination to cling to her sports as well as to her femininity—and to be comfortable while she played. That votus or curves, that writed so long it be pulled back into fashion, brought girdles back to the picture, in marked contrast to the picture, in marked contrast to the turbulent twenties when in the checkroom and sailed

. The girl of 1938 pays more attention to the selection of her girdle than to picking any other part of her costume — and she keeps it on. She has to if she wants to retain that seducive combination of a slender tapering writs and curves reminiscent of Lillian Russell's. Her 1938 model it cut, fit, clasticized, and occasionally even honed—to mold her rather than ace her-but it is figure discipline

. Lingerie, too, harks back to grandmother. Cotton petticoats and slips are here, designed with em-broidered ruffles to wear under spring and summer dance frocks. And from Paris comes word of frivolous lingerie finished with old-fashioned beading and threaded with shining satin ribbons. High-necked long-sleeved night of sheer lace-trimmed georgette appear in modern steamated bedrooms - reminders of the nights when flannel nightrobes crept into feather beds.
