HORSE DAYS BUGGY Take a Look at John D., the Cyclist, Teddy in Cuba, and Anna Held Having Her Picture Taken

A mere youngster of 74 was John D. Rockefeller when, in 1913, he had his valet push him about his private golf links in Cleveland. The bicycle was a snappy chainless model.

When Woodrow Wilson entered the White House (1913) he had not yet discarded the old-fashioned Victoria in which he appears above, out for a drive with Mrs. Wilson. Secret service men followed in an electric automobile.

Women once played bard, fast tennis, in clothes like this. Here's Mrs. May Sutton Bundy in a Californis match shortly after she had won the national championship in 1904. This was large shorts.

The most famous beauty of the early days of this century was-Anna Held, who even achieved the ultimate fame of the period by seeing her picture appear on cigar boxes. She was renowned (and justly, you will admit) for her figure, and was the first wife of Florenz Ziegfeld.

Guess who? If you don't recognize him, note that even at an early age he seems fond of horse and rides with the carriage safety strap unbuckled. Yes, it's the Prince of Wales at the age of four.

By JOHN STRIPLING

Snopping on a rainy day, that is something everyone has done, most of us more than once. Just the thought of scurrying from shop to shop, with small pellets of water beating a rhymatic tatoo on your coat and hat, and watching the tiny streamlets made from drops out of drain-pipes into the gutter-taking it all in with a feeling that every thing is cool and clean, but this is only a part of the ecstasy, the acute thrill of rainy-day shopping.

Journey into a department store as you come to it on a drenched street. Feel its pleasant warmth and dryness. Enjoy these feelings, for though you were thoroughly apprecia-tive of the rain as you sensed lts damp breath upon your cheek, now, shut in and away from its bracing chill and domi nance, you are able to enjoy fully the fact that no matter how chill and wet outside, it is warm, and dry and pleasantly colorful Inside

You walk over to a counter, and gazing through its glass, see countless things you would like to purchase. Some of them are too expensive for you to buy, and these you naturally want most. Some you can buy; you attempt to from these the ones that will bring you most pleasure. "What can I do for you.

She tells you, explaining its merits as an Easter dress material.

"I have a pattern that would make that up just darling-let me have, let's see now, I believe it would take about three yards." You open your purse and count out the price.
"Is that all I can do for you?" she asks politely.

"Yes, thank you, I'll just look around a bit."

At first you are distressed on getting back into the dreary rain; however, you are soon yielding to its old spell, and pleasantly turn for home. You arrive with soaked hat and coat, and with damp feet and spotted hose. Yet you are absurdly happy; you have been shopping on a rainy day.

The opinion harbored by some of America's leading football educators that scouting is a pernicious practice — that it isn't exactly "cricket," as they say in England —gets nothing but a hearty laugh from the English Football associa

They not only believe in scouting right up to the hilt, by jove, but they see to it that nothing tricky is put over on the gumshoes, that they are given every co-operation in getting a line on next week's op-

A team must put its full strength on the field for every league game spectator, is entitled to see every thing a team has. A quaint idea eh? But you ought to see the crowds it pulls through the gate.

SURE TO SEE FIRST STRINGERS

Before the rule was passed, they say, it got to where you didn't know whether you were going to see the first team or the third stringers in action, especially if an outfit was playing a "breather" and knew there were scouts in the
