URELY ERSONAL By John

Last week I mentioned the vast amount of handout literature that crosses our desk in any given week. I came across a research report from Texas A&M that had a heading that compelled further study. Usually these reports receive little attendion except to glance at the lead line and thereby ascertain if we are interested in going any further into the article.

The writer of this release must have known that most of their releases get this kind of cursory treatment because he came up with a real attention compeller. The article was headed, "Bathroom Study Yields Interesting Results." How does this grab you?

Those of us who have frequented very many comfort stations, private, public and privies, know what a wealth of art and literature adorns those utilitarian walls. Was it possible that a serious researcher was making an effort to record those esoteric sketches and fundamental verses for posterity? invading the last sanctuary of harried America? Was the twoway mirror and hidden camera coming into man's last abode of aloneness?

Well, the study was not along to finance FFA projects. those interesting lines and I saying that the ordinary functional bathroom will no longer satisfy everyone, according to a study made at Cornell University. Now who doesn't know that?

A tour through most any new home will let you see the current trend in the expansion of the bathroom from a room of utility to one of almost Byzantine lavishness. The not-so-old feature of a strategically placed magazine rack has given way to TV niches, stereo outlets, three-sided mirrors, wall-towall carpeting, gold fixtures, crystal lights, his andher lavatories, and in some, side-byside commodes.

The report also stated that most families prefer two bathrooms. Again, who couldn't have told that without a research grant? Many homes not only fea- Spurs And Saddle ture two bathrooms but a shower and washroom immediately adjacent to the back door so the tired and dirty American male can make himself presentable before he is allowed to invade the rest of the house.

The article concluded with the observation that lack of space and storage were the complaints most frequently voiced toward present bathroom facilities. Again, any builder can tell you that the modern centers of comfort and cleanliness contain more floor space than the rapidly disappearing living room.

Today's trend is toward an increase in creature comforts and less on sociability facilities. Whether this trend toward physical comfort and less on man's relation with his fellow man will be beneficial for us, we only let history decide.

In the meantime, if the people planners would exercise a modicum of common sense, I am sure that answers to burning questions like bathroom studies can be obtained at less and retailer of items in the
