CROCKETT SEEKS COOPERATION IN CLEAN-UP DRIVE

Chamber Of Commerce Names Committee To Assist In Move

According to Mayor L. R. Crockett, a general system of gathering garbage is being instituted by the city, and two men with city trucks will be employed four days each week in the picking up of refuse and carrying it to the dump yard, which has been secured near the city limits.

"Heretofore" said Mayor Crockett "we have had to truck the rubbish too far that we couldn't make enough trips daily, but we believe now with this new arrangement that we can keep the city clean. However, the next problem is garbage and trash cans. The cost for this would be considerable, and the city cannot furnish these. I believe that some arrangement might be made through the various civic organizations and clubs of the city to install these containers, and the city would be glad to help work out such a plan whereby we could keep the city clean."

Mayor Crockett addressed the local Chamber of Commerce luncheon meeting Tuesday on the city's clean-up, urging the cooperation of all citizens in their efforts to keep Littlefield clean.

A committee was appointed by the booster group to go into the matter of garbage receptacles. J. W. Keithley was named chairman, with J. O. Garlington and W. H. Madden assisting.

SCHOOL AID IS INCREASED $1.00 PER SCHOLASTIC

Littlefield Schools To Receive $1700 Additional Benefit

The State board of education voted Saturday to increase by $1 the current state school aid apportionment of $17.50 per scholastic, and according to F. O. Boles, Lamb county Superintendent of schools, Littlefield schools will receive $1700 additional aid, which will go towards the general operating expenses of the school system.

This increase applies to approximately 1,575,000 school children. A committee from the State Teachers' association pleaded with the board to add $2.50 per capita, or a total of nearly $4,000,000, to the allotment for the present fiscal year while spokesmen for property taxpayers asked that there be no change.

The representatives of the teachers' association contended that schools were badly in need of funds to complete their terms. The per capita of $18.50 will be the highest in the state's history.

The vote to boost the apportionment approximately $1,575,000 was 5 to 2. Five of the board members had objected to raising it to $20 per capita and four had opposed an increase to $19.

The state comptroller's department had estimated that the surplus at the end of the fiscal year under the $17.50 allotment would be more than $3,500,000. The majority of the board members took the position, however, that there was no certainty of such a large surplus.

William McCraw, attorney general, had ruled earlier in the day that the board was empowered to boost the allotment. There remained a possibility that the question would be tested in the courts.

LAMB COUNTY PAROLE BOARD TO BE SET UP

Pat Boone, J. W. James, Guy Willis, Joe Salem and Bob Crawford Named

At the Littlefield Chamber of Commerce weekly luncheon meeting Tuesday the matter of the recommendation of five men from Lamb county to serve on a volunteer county parole board was discussed. It was brought out at the meeting that Governor James V. Allred was asking the organization of parole boards for each county, and that 158 such organizations had already been set up. It was also explained that these groups need not concern themselves with recommending executive clemency, but only in supervising paroles, and act as paroling agents for the governor. It was suggested in a letter from the office of the Secretary of State on the subject that the various civic clubs be conferred with and asked to recommend five suitable men in Lamb county to serve on such a parole board.

Recommended To Serve After some discussion it was decided that the following men be recommended:

Mr. Zimmermann's statement follows:

"To the Voters of Lamb County: "I hereby announce my candidacy for district judge to fill the unexpired term of my deceased friend, Hon. H. C. Joiner.

"Our Constitution provides that in the event of the death of a judge, the governor can only appoint someone in the nature of a temporary judge until the next general election, when a successor can be selected by the people to fill out the unexpired term of the deceased judge. It is a wise provision. The governor may refuse to appoint someone merely because of political considerations."

THE Westinghouse UNIT HAS ALWAYS BEEN Hermetically sealed

● The first Westinghouse Refrigerator ever sold had a Hermetically-sealed Mechanism. Twelve years of research, experiment, and testing went into its development. To these years of pre-testing have been added long years of actual operating proof. In thousands of homes daily experience shows that this forced-draft cooled, Hermetically-sealed, lifetime-oiled Mechanism is the key to unusually low-cost, trouble-free refrigeration. That is why owners, by thousands, say "If we were buying a new refrigerator today it would certainly be a Westinghouse." That's why Westinghouse can say, "With every sealed-in mechanism you get five years' protection against service expense at a cost of only $5—a dollar a year—included in the price."

SPADE NEWS

JUNIOR-SENIOR BANQUET IS A "HUMDINGER"

The Junior-Senior banquet, given Thursday evening, May 14, was one of the best on record. It was done under the motif of "The Last Round-Up", and both decorations and program carried out the idea to perfection.

The scheme of decoration followed the red of a spring sunset and the rich tan of creaking saddles. The table was arranged in the form of "ye lucky ole horseshoe", with ample elbow room for all who came for chuck.

The program was as follows: Toastmaster—Bud Vann. First Brandings—Irene Byrne. Heading for the Last Round Up—Sarah Smith.

The table was shadowed from over head with streamers of red and tan, and the shadowy gloom was broken through the meal only by the light flickering light of tall candles set along the board.

The serving girls, eight sophomores, were clad in white with white or black ten-gallon hats which they continued to wear even as they distributed the chuck.

Besides the fourteen juniors there were five seniors there, ten teachers, two of whom brought a wife, and seven board members and their wives.

The entire program was directed by Miss Dorothy Faye Rusk, class sponsor. The juniors' mother worked faithfully and effectively to make the food good and the supply sufficient.

BACCALAUREATE SERMON AT SPADE SUNDAY LAST

The evening service at Spade, Sunday, May 17, was given over to the Baccalaureate sermon. Both churches dismissed their crowds and came to the school auditorium.

Rev. Tony Q. Dyess, pastor of the local Methodist church, spoke "Love of the Difficult" and gave but pointed comment on the need of having a difficult task to do. Two incidental comments found attentive ear. The pastor commended the knowledge stored in books and the quick growth and careful work of the plant in the hot sun, and pointed out that some things, despite the fact that learning has its importance, are of a sturdier nature. Then he drew out the challenge to all, particularly to the graduating class, that they give God's word the chance we give a text book in chemistry for example. "Believe in the Bible and its directions for life as you do in the directions for an experiment in chemistry; test God's formulas of life," urged the speaker as he concluded his appeal for a turning toward the Christian life.

On Monday evening, May 11, the room mothers of the senior class of the Spade high school entertained them with a visit to the Palace Theatre, Littlefield, and refreshments of ice cream and cake was served afterwards.

Those who went along were: Doyle Dyer and Misses Sarah Smith, Eloise Petty, and Sybil Keesee, and Mr. Dodson, the sponsor, Madams Jack D. Wester and C. R. Smith, and Messrs. Wester and Smith. Miss Mary Ruth Long, the class president, was unable to attend.

Keesee served double dip cones and cookies to the first grade for whom they are the room mothers. Mrs. T. W. Tucker and Mrs. Nath Griffin served the sixth grade with coolade. OUR SOUTH AMERICAN FRONTIER

The dream of a great motor highway from the northern border of the United States to the southern tip of South America is rapidly on its way to realization. The road to Mexico City is nearly completed. Work has been begun by several nations south of Mexico. Our Federal government has offered to give $400,000 to the governments of Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama, to build bridges for this Pan-American highway.

To the United States, and particularly to our young men of ambition and enterprise, this new tie between North and South America is a wide door opening on to new frontiers. The greatest opportunities for the pioneering spirit which made America what it is, lie to the south of us. Never before has there been such a feeling of friendliness between the nations of South America and our own country. The Pan-American Airways has done much to promote this feeling.

Americans are welcome as never before in the vast undeveloped regions of the Southern Hemisphere. Where once the people of the Spanish-American republics looked to Germany for the development of their natural resources, to Great Britain for their capital investments and to Italy for their new population, they are now turning their eyes to the United States. American motor cars, American electrical equipment, American shoes, American commodities generally, are gaining new footholds in the South American market, and Americans of spirit and energy are made to feel at home.

There are still great unrealized opportunities in our own country. But in the pioneering fields which appeal to the adventurous, South America today offers American youth great opportunity.

It is called Alka-Seltzer because it makes a sparkling alkaline drink, and as it contains an analgesic (Acetyl-Salicylate) it first relieves the pain of everyday ailments and then by restoring the alkaline balance corrects the cause when due to excess acid.

After trying many brands of medicine—so-called relief for gas, and all of them a failure, I gave up hopes. By chance I tried Alka-Seltzer—I am more than satisfied. Geo. Bennett, New York, N. Y.

The GOOSE WOMAN

by REX BEACH

SEVENTH INSTALMENT

SYNOPSIS—Amos Ethridge is found murdered in a country lane with a crude cross of twigs on his breast and a scented sheet of note paper in his pocket. He was the richest man in the state with power and influence enough to make candidate for Governor. With his death came hints of an unsavory private life, of wronged women and betrayed husbands and fathers who had reason to wish him dead. There was also a powerful secret political organization opposed to him—Mary Holmes, called "the goose woman" by newspaper reporters, lives nearest the scene of the crime on a small chicken farm where she ekes out a poor living and tries to find in drink the forgetfulness of past glories when she was Maria di Nardi, world-renowned opera singer—Gerald Holmes, a talented young artist, is hated and loved by his mother who is embittered because his birth caused the loss of her voice and wrecked her operatic career. He has been befriended by the murdered Ethridge, and is engaged to another of Amos Ethridge's proteges—Hazel Woods, lovely and brilliant young actress, has been helped to success by Ethridge. She lives in a small cottage owned by Ethridge—Jacob Riggs, eccentric old-time actor, now a doorman at the theater where Hazel Woods plays, has appointed himself her guardian and lives in a room over her garage.

The next day Mary Holmes hired a neighbor to take charge of her poultry farm, then she dressed in her best, packed a few belongings in a valise and went to a hotel in town, where she found a room already engaged for her and a woman awaiting her arrival. The stranger proved to be a matron from the girls' reformatory. Together the two women visited several shops and department stores and made numerous purchases. A hair dresser and a manicurist were at the hotel when they returned; with their aid and under the matron's directions Mary Holmes went through quite a transformation. Later in the afternoon she put herself in the hands of a facial masseuse.

Mrs. Holmes experienced a great pride and a great satisfaction a great changed appearance, also a growing election at the full realization of her new situation. She would have been thoroughly contented with the state of affairs except for one thing—she discovered that the matron had gone through her valise and removed her bottle of gin, her storm anchor. She hinted that she was quite tired and left down after the day's excitement and felt the need of a little stimu-

He was fixing the cross of twigs ant, but the matron told her firmly that she must do without. It was Mr. Vogel's orders. Mrs. Holmes argued that she had a bad heart and was subject to "low" spells; her doctor had prescribed a small nip of liquor, several times a day—not enough to be intoxicating, of course just sufficient to keep her poor heart going.

But the matron did not drink and she declared very firmly that she did not propose to let her charge drink. That, in fact, was the principal reason for her presence here, and Mrs. Holmes might as well make up her mind right now to indulge in nothing more heart stimulating than tea and coffee until Mr. Vogel was through with her.

This domineering attitude resulted in a stormy scene during which Mrs. Holmes indignantly demanded to know if she was free, white, and twenty-one, or if she was Mr. Vogel's prisoner, his slave. The matron informed her coldly that she could consider herself anything that pleased her, but if she insisted upon disobeying the prosecuting attorney he could find ready means of committing her to some place where she would be forcibly restrained from making a beast of herself.

In spite of her pleasant surroundings, Mrs. Holmes slept badly that night and when she awoke she was irritable, her nerves were unstrung.

In his investigation of the Ethridge murder Mr. Vogel's diligence was not prompted solely by an impersonal desire to solve a mystery and to bring the perpetrator of a dastardly crime to justice. Few officials are animated by motives so simple and so public spirited. He had not asked to handle this case, the assignment had been forced upon him by reason of the widespread interest which the press awakened in it. Quite naturally, therefore he had determined to get as much publicity as possible out of it for himself. To that end he had kept in close touch with the newspaper men and periodically had fed them enough news, both real and imaginary, to keep the case, and his name, on the front page. But reporters are wise and worldly; daily they were becoming more difficult to handle; some of them had begun to refer rather biting in their daily stories to his lack of progress and several had told him that they would be called in before long unless there was something doing. Had Vogel been entirely selfish he would have welcomed an opportunity to work unhindered, unembarrassed, but as it was he urged them to wait and promised important developments in a short time, they waited. Westland waited. The country waited.

Vogel kept his promise. He sent for the reporters. He kept them waiting for an hour before admitting them to his private office, then he asked them to be seated while he read them an affidavit.

It was an amazing document that they listened to—it was the stenographic report of a carefully prepared statement by Mary Holmes.

Mrs. Holmes "being duly sworn," etc., recited that about ten o'clock on the night upon which Amos Ethridge had met his death an automobile had passed her house going east and had stopped near the entrance to the Ethridge lane. There it had turned off the road into small grove of pine trees which were visible from her front window. That which had caused her in particular to notice this car was the fact that it was running with one headlight. When it stopped in the grove, this one light had been turned off. She had wondered what anyone could be doing in that place at such an hour and had suspected that it might be somebody from the Italian settlement contemplating a raid on her chicken house. Marauders had robbed her roosts so often that she had been forced to buy a watchdog.

She would have satisfied herself promptly, only for the fact that her son Gerald arrived a few minutes later and his coming drove it out of her mind. Gerald had remained with her until after midnight. When he had gone, apprehension, or perhaps curiosity to see if the car was still there, had prompted her to investigate. She had walked up the road, moving slowly and cautiously. She was still some distance from the pine grove when another car had approached from behind her, and in order to avoid detection in the glare of its lights she had stepped aside into a clump of bushes. This second car had turned at the lane and had stopped, with its lights brilliantly illuminating the gate and the shrubbery on each side of it. Mrs. Holmes had recognized the driver, when he got out to open the gate, as Amos Ethridge.

Vogel paused and glanced at the reporters. They were frozen in various attitudes of attention, so he resumed his reading.

"I was much relieved to see him there and I was just about to call to him and ask him to wait a minute when I saw something very strange and startling. Suddenly, without warning, the bushes parted and a man stepped out. He was dressed in a long white cloak or mantle. I thought it must be a ghost!"

"Question. Describe this man, please, as closely as you can."

"Answer. I'm afraid I can't describe him very accurately. I was nervous and frightened, anyhow, and this—this apparition made it worse. He was tall and I think he wore a mask, but I'm not sure. Maybe he just wore a hat and and it shaded his face. That's all I seem to remember—a tall man in a long robe, but I heard him speak to Mr. Ethridge.

"Question. What did you hear him say?"

"Answer. He called him by name, then he said something about a woman. It sounded as if he said, 'I won't let you take her away from

LONESOME FOR MOTHER

Dear Mother I'm so lonesome and sad tonight,
Just longing and yearning for you,
For the times that have gone ne're to return,
To the times we've all bid adieu.
Dear mother, if only you were here tonight,
To smile at me once again,
It would banish my sorrow, stop these tears,
And ease that awful pain.
No joy comes to me any more,
No comfort or peace of mind,
Since you've gone to that Heavenly home,
Leaving us all behind.

The Goose Woman—

"Question. You are positive that he said something about a woman?"
"Answer. Yes I remember that distinctly. Then he shot Mr. Ethridge. He shot him twice, before he could fall. He kept shooting at him as he lay on the ground. It was horrible. I thought I must be dreaming or that it was a spotlight and I was away out at the front of the house—it seemed so unreal. What happened next is pretty confused. I was deathly afraid and I didn't dare cry out or move for fear the assassin might have confederate near by and they'd kill me, too. I just stood there staring and shaking. I saw the man kneel over Mr. Ethridge's body, but his back was to me. I presume he was fixing that cross of twigs. Then he got up, passed out of the glare of the headlights, and turned them off. After that, of course, I couldn't see what he did.

"Question. What did you do?"
"Answer. I stood still. I didn't dare move. By and by I saw another light, across the road in the pine grove, so I dropped to my knees and crouched in the weeds and bushes. I stayed there until the other car passed me—the car with one headlight. Then I got up and ran home. I suppose I ran home; anyhow, I found myself there with all my doors locked."

Vogel laid aside the document from which he had been reading and said:

"That, gentlemen, is the gist of Mrs. Holmes's sworn statement, which she made voluntarily. Rather extraordinary, eh?"
"Do you believe it?" somebody inquired.

"Absolutely! Chief Lopez and I questioned her carefully and we failed to shake her on any point. What's more, we examined the roadside where she claimed she hid, and we found an old glove which had lain there for some time. It was her glove. She showed us the mate to it at her house."

"Well, I don't believe a word of it!" one of the local newspaper men declared. "I talked to her the next morning—I asked her a thousand questions—and she didn't tell me any such story. It sounds altogether too theatrical. People don't happen along country roads after midnight just in time to see murders committed in the glare of automobile headlights. Why didn't she spill this sooner?"

"She says the talk about the secret order frightened her."
"She's a common drunk; she's eccentric and utterly unreliable. I know all about her!"
"Indeed?" Vogel grinned sarcastically. "Then you probably know who she really is. You know her stage name." His listeners pricked up their ears, but he forestalled their questions by saying: "I'm making you boys a present of a big story that you weren't smart enough to get for yourselves. How many of you remember a grand-opera singer by the name of Maria di Nardi? Not many. She was before your time. But I remember her and you can look her up. She lost her voice right at the height of her career and dropped out of sight; was forgotten. One of the tragedies of the profession. She's living in Westland and her name is—Mary Holmes! Oh, you don't have to take my word for it! You can talk to her as much as you please. Break down her story if you can. It's more than I've been able to do."

"But wait!" another man queried, eagerly. "What about the one-eyed automobile and the fellow in the robe? Have you got him?"
Vogel smiled again, this time complacently. "Don't ask me to tell you everything I know. I'm giving you this story because the Ethridge case is being tried in the newspapers and because you boys have worked hard on it. I'm treating you squarely and I expect square treatment in return. Understand? All right! Make the most of what you've got and—maybe I'll have another story for you tomorrow. Possibly this evening." With these words the speaker opened the door to an inner office and called Mrs. Holmes.

When she appeared the newspaper men eyed her in astonishment, for she was amazingly changed. She was no longer the unlovely creature some of them had seen and all of them had written about; she was a quite imposing middle-aged woman. Her hair no longer hung in greasy snarls, it was soft and clean and smoothly combed; her body had shape, and a goodlooking street dress lent pleasing lines to it; there were silk hose and highheeled shoes upon her feet. More astonishing than this, however, was the alteration in the woman herself. She entered the room with her head up and with a poise, a carriage that only the stage can teach; in her bearing was a dignity that brought the reporters to their feet and kept them standing until Vogel had introduced her and had given her a chair.

This was Mary Holmes's hour and she made the most of it. She took a tremendous satisfaction out of the evident embarrassment of these young men. They had maligned her and she hated them for it, but she concealed her feelings behind an air of modesty and simplicity which was anything but genuine. She would have enjoyed nothing more than to turn the vials of her wrath upon them, but, realizing that through them she was talking to a vast audience, she rose to the occasion as she had risen to other roles.

Vogel had cleverly stage-managed her appearance and she had rehearsed herself well. The result was all anticipated—she scored a triumph. She was acting, of course, but what a part to play and what an audience to play to! An audience consisting of America, the world! The world that had forgotten her! Well, it would remember her now and it would throb and sympathize with her story. That story, to her mind was infinitely more dramatic, infinitely more important, than the story of the Ethridge murder.
