Believing that the cinema is the one and only way to tell the true story of his expeditions, Rear Ad-miral Richard E. Byrd gave his feet of motion picture film, a visual record of the highlights of Byrd's cond Antarctic expedition.

This photoplay, Byrd's second Antarctic Expedition, Paramount's Little America," which plays at he Lyric theatre Wednesday and Thursday is the second picture in which the admiral has been directly interested. The first one centerd upon his flight over the South Pole during the original expedition to Little America.

Admiral Byrd's exploration ventures began in 1925 when he commanded the aviation unit of the MacMillan Polar expedition. He organized his own group in 1926 and on May 9 flew across the North Pole with Floyd Bennett at the controls of the plane. With three companions, the admiral flew across the Atlantic ocean from New York to France on June 29-July 1, 1927. The plane landed in the surf on the coast of France in a storm but all the occupants escaped.

Byrd's next outstanding achievement was to fly over the South Pole on Nov. 29, 1929, becoming he first man to reach both poles by air. On his second expedition, Admiral Byrd voluntarily remained to chart valuable weather data. The congressional medal of honor, he Hubbard gold medal and other

The present report on the current position of the industry and the outlook for the future is its broad general refutation of the allegations against it, and its presenta-tion in some detail of the evidence n support of that refutation."

Declaring that the industry previ ously has been called upon to dispel fears, about the available supply of petroleum, the report recalls that n 1925 a similar study was undertaken by the institute, the findings being presented in a report entitled 'American Petroleum: Supply and Demand."

Known petroleum reserves at that ime were estimated at 5,321,000,000 barrels, with indications that addi-tional reserves would be found. In he 10 years since that calculation, 8.692.000.000 barrels of oil have been produced and consumed-50 per cent more than the entire proved reserves in 1925! yet more than 12,-000,000,000 barrels of proven serves are known to be still be below ground.

"The fact that proven reserves serves still to be located and developed are far greater than have ever before been estimated.

Improvements in production meth ods, which also brighten the outlook, are cited. These improved methods, make it possible to obtain from 50 to 100 per cent more oil

Answering "Alarmists"

It was explained that the report, which not only forecast future demand and reviews technological and other progress of the industry in conserving petroleum resources, was made not only to reveal the industry's present position and outlook, but also to refute charges of alarmists that petroleum reserves are in danger of early exhaustion. The report denies the industry has been wasteful, and either unwilling or unable to cooperate in conservation efforts, and insists that rigo-
