Is Noted Fisherman

Jack Lamb, famed fisherman and outdoor photographer, who will bring his magnificent colored motion pictures of the Big Bend National Park to the High School Auditorium in Lubbock on June 6th, has been busy editing and cutting these films in Fort Worth for the past several days. When Lamb went to the Park he only figured on making about 1000 feet of film, but after arriving there and recognizing the immense possibilities for motion pictures in this colorful 800,000 acre project, he remained far beyond his allotted time and shot several thousand feet of film.

Celebrities Have Wheels Stolen As Town Sleeps

In the past 25 years, articles, some valuable and some not so valuable, have been stolen in Littlefield by the burglary route.

But—it's a "fine kettle of fish" when a thief . . . robber . . . or burglar, starts pilfering with the banker's, the sheriff's, the county judge's, a doctor's, a laundryman's, and a merchant's automobiles!

Last Thursday night someone "made a raid" in the vicinity of east seventh and eighth streets, and jacked up these six automobiles, each at the respective homes of the owners, and took the entire wheels, including tires, tubes, hub caps, and lugs, off each of the cars, and they haven't been seen since! (The wheels nor the thieves).

As luck would have it . . . all the owners of the cars had spare tires . . . but some of them had to call service station attendants to pump up the spares, before they could be placed on the cars.

Sam Hutson, Lamb County sheriff, said he reported the robbery to the law, and no stone has been left unturned, in search of the robbers.

Stanley Doss, county judge, said he believed these were jinx on his automobiles . . . as he is able to walk around, with a brace on his neck, as a result of an automobile wreck two weeks ago. His car was a total wreck, so he purchased a new one—Chevrolet. His new car had only been driven a few miles, when the wheel was stolen. But he is glad the culprit didn't take the car!

Dr. I. T. Shotwell reported that he was glad he had not been called to a patient's bedside in a hurry, and he would like to find that "practically new tire."

New Act Proposes To Stop Strikes

President Roosevelt indicated Tuesday that one purpose of the administration's new property seizure bill was to end any irreconcilable striker lockouts in defense industries.

It is to be used in other situations involving a stoppage of deliveries, he said, but he cited just one past instance as a reason for the measure and that was a strike, the protracted dispute at the Allis-Chalmers plant in Milwaukee.

Under present law, he pointed out, the government has authority to take over a plant at which there is a refusal to supply the government with defense products. In the Allis-Chalmers case, he said, the strikers were willing to return to work if the company would agree to certain stipulations, and at the same time the company was willing to resume production if certain concessions were made.

A Strike of The People

If we want strikes in defense industries to stop, it's up to the people in this town to help stop them.

It may seem to many of us that there isn't much we can do about it—that it's the problem of the federal government in Washington. But we mustn't forget that everyone of us is a part of that government and what we say, if we say it loud enough, is what really makes action.

Every report we get from Washington stresses the fact that our senator and representative are more interested in our opinions than they ever were before.

If you want a law banning strikes tell your congressman about it. If you think we should try to settle strikes without a new law, tell your congressman that. But whatever you think, don't leave him guessing about it—make sure there is no doubt in his mind just what you want.

It's within our power, right here in this town, to do a lot toward settling this situation which is slowing up defense.

Some of us blame the unions and others blame the employers for strikes, but all of us agree that, whoever is to blame, strikes mustn't go on.

And the way to bring them to an abrupt stop is by a nation-wide counter "strike" of the American people—a "strike" in which we stage a mass-picketing demonstration in every congressman's office in the form of letters in which we demand an immediate settlement of all strikes.

Mrs. Matilda Fornberg, 85, of Cheyenne, Wyo., helped fight off the Indians in 1877 and is still one of the best shots in the state . . . The face of beautiful blonde Elaine Bassett, daughter of a Baptist minister in Dallas, Texas, appearing on Canadian army recruiting posters, was chosen by governmental officials to "inspire" army enlistment . . . There are more fat women than fat men, according to Dr. Robert W. Keeton of the University of Illinois medical school, because the majority of fat women are married and do not have enough work to do nowadays to keep their weight down. . . . Recently released findings on study by the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's clubs reveal that opposition to employment of married women is growing.

TOO MUCH TALKING BY A WOMAN IS GROUNDS FOR DIVORCE

In Siam a man is allowed only one divorce, but he can sell his other wives. A man in the Turkoman Republic simply says "Go" to his wife. A Cylonese man can write to his wife, "Thou art divorced," and whether she receives the letter or not she is divorced. Among the Moors a man can divorce his wife if she does not become the mother of a boy.

FROM HOBBY TO VOCATION

MRS. JEANETTE STEVENS of New York has expanded a hobby and $28 into a new and unique business. Five years ago Mrs. Stevens, who loves the sea, decided to build a boat. By using her own hands, the plans drawn by a sympathetic brother-in-law, the $28 and some paint, screws and planks donated by friends, she built a 16-foot sloop. Soon she was sailing around the Sound. Landlubber friends who contemplated buying boats began to beg her to teach them how to handle ropes and compasses and how to read charts. She did—for fees. Now she owns a 50-foot schooner and teaches a seamanship to business men and women!

SALESMAN TOO GOOD

MRS. ALICE LEE, proprietor of a gift shop in Pasadena, Calif., has a husband who is too good a salesman. While she was absent from the shop, he sold for $2 a very valuable clock, not knowing that it had been merely left there for repairs. Mrs. Lee had to advertise to get it back.

A SHORT TIME AGO BARBARA THORNDIKE

13-year-old school girl of Norwalk, Conn., found fault with the clothes designed for the "awkward age". She found them either too childish or too grown-up. So she designed some to suit herself, took the sketches into a Fifth Avenue Shop. The shop referred her to a manufacturer. Now, between English and History study, Barbara designs clothes for the manufacturer, who pays her a royalty.

Sensational performance on the steepest grade in the nation was demonstrated at the General Motors Proving Grounds last week by this 1941 Oldsmobile six-cylinder club sedan. The new hill, a 60 per cent grade constructed by General Motors to test army equipment, provided an excellent opportunity to demonstrate the flexibility and exclusive safety advantages of Oldsmobile's Hydra-Matic Drive, according to H. T. Youngren, Oldsmobile's chief engineer. Because clutch pushing, gear shifting and car stalling are all eliminated with Hydra-Matic Drive, it is possible to climb even the steepest hills with ease and safety, he added.

"As a general statement, all carrying charges for the two-year period should approximate something like 1 1/2 cents per pound. If this is added to the price advanced on the loan note and subtracted from the current spot price for the same grade and staple it should give a fair indication of the equity held by the producer.

"Examples have been given us of producers who have recently sold 1938 loan cotton for as much as six dollars a bale and corresponding increases for later years. Consumer Should Use More Cotton

"How are you going to use your cotton stamps?" is a question which many of you will be discussing with members of your family or with the neighbors. Cotton, the most plentiful textile is gradually falling into the class of the most widely used fiber. And there is no reason why cotton should not be more widely used. From the standpoint of usefulness:

1. Cotton may be spun into a soft, downy product or a tough product which will wear well; or it may be woven into a warm winter fabric or into a cool summer garment.
2. Cotton may be used for the simplest house dress or it may be made into the daintiest of evening gowns.
3. Cotton, because of its durability may be used for mechanical purposes.
4. Cotton is an excellent fiber for taking all laundering methods. It has a resistance to alkali.
5. Cotton can take such finishes as water - proofing, anti - creasing, non-shrinking etc.
6. Cotton is nature's whitest fiber; it has an excellent affinity for dyes and it holds dyes well; it can be treated chemically and changed into many forms; and it does not "yellow" in service nor determine "yellow" in service nor deteriorate in storage.
7. Because of the many experiments with the possibilities for cotton it is widely used for bed sheets, pillow cases, terry towels, dish towels, draperies, bookbinding, uniforms for the physician as well as the office worker; and many others too numerous to mention. For America — the cotton should buy cotton—cotton's best in America lies in America.

The ROAD to BAGDAD

by GEORGE GIBBS

CHAPTER II

SYNOPSIS

On board the Orizaba, Camilla Dean, beautiful American girl, has made the acquaintance of Joseph Asad, wealthy Syrian, and Michael Gay, American engineer going to the East to establish a new line over the desert from Damascus to Baghdad. She becomes especially interested in Ronald Barker, who comes aboard at Marseilles, because the night before she has heard three men whispering outside her window that he must be out of the way before the boat reaches Alexandria. Camilla meets Barker, tells him what she has heard, and to satisfy her curiosity, tells her that he is an American educated at Oxford and now much interested in the business situation.

Quickly Camilla said, "And, now it is time to turn in—"

Kerak. That doesn't mean a thing to me either. Kerak. What's Kerak? It might be Arabic.

He tried to keep the look of interest out of his eyes but she did not miss it. "You've discovered something. What is it?"

"Nothing. Nothing at all." She peered at him keenly. "Kerak," she said again, frowning. "Kerak. I remember now—here on the ship an article about Syria in a magazine. In the ship's library. El Kerak! I have it! A bandit who roams east and south of the Lebanon Mountains, terrorizing the natives. This article said he was a kind of oriental Robin Hood, little better than a thief and an assassin, but with moments of great generosity."

"Did it say that?" "It's curious," she gasped. "Wait a moment!"

And before he had time for a word in reply she had darted into the companionway.

In the corner of the saloon were the bookcases and magazines. In a few moments Camilla had found what she had come for, a copy of the Geographic Magazine for the month of July of the previous year. An article by an American newspaper man. She skimmed the pages rapidly. Pictures of the Lebanon Mountains, views of Damascus, camps of Bedouins . . . and then—here it was—El Kerak, a photograph of the Syrian bandit at the flap of his tent; another one, a better one, a candid shot in the full blaze of sunlight as he was mounting his horse, possibly taken without his knowledge. He wore the conventional flowing white robes and kaffiyeh, a small mustache and an impatient beard. She gave a gasp of surprise and rose, aware that Barker had followed her from the deck outside and now stood beside her chair.

"Mr. Barker, I've made a discovery. Please look. Pictures of Ronald Barker in masquerade. Excellent pictures and the likeness unmistakable!"

He took the magazine from her hand, turned over the pages and then, "Astonishing resemblance, isn't it?" he said, almost too carelessly this time.

"Very. The mask is off. Admit it, Ronald Barker."

He seemed really disturbed and she had a good deal of quiet pleasure from her triumph. He took the magazine from her fingers again, looked at the pictures, then, putting it under his arm, turned toward the door of the gangway.

"Come," he said quietly. "Let's go out on deck again. Do you mind?"

They reached the rail where they could continue their conversation beyond the reach of listeners. "I suppose I might attempt to carry on, but I'm afraid you've got the goods on me as we say in the U.S.A. I'm sorry you've found me out. You see, I've moved about in Syria and Palestine with the utmost freedom and now, possibly, I'll have to find a new personality, a new identity."

"I hope that won't be necessary," she said quietly. "We'll end that story now." She took the magazine from his fingers and dropped it into the sea. He glanced at her and then muttered the one word, "Thanks."

"But you've got the story; I may as well tell you. There's a price set on El Kerak's head by the French and by the British—"

"—which they will never have a chance to pay."

"Exactly," he finished. There was a silence made more definite by the swish of foam and the rising wind. "Well," he said at last, "what are you going to do about it?"

"What can be done about it? Nothing. And what's the answer to the mystery of the wireless about Kerak? It's just a huge joke. Who is Mohammed Ali?"

"He may be anyone. It's a name as common in Mohammedan countries as John Smith is in the United States."

"And the wireless operator could tell you nothing?"

Barker shook his head. "He received the message and tried to deliver it, thinking it was a mistake. But Mahmoud Daoud, the only person with a similar Egyptian or Arabic name refused to receive it."

"And the sender?" "A certain James Robinson; address, Harwich Crescent, London, England. That ended the investigation."

"Well, what's the answer?"

"The answer is that you're not the only one who knows my secret. The answer is that someone in London, perhaps someone aboard the Orizaba, knows who the bandit El Kerak is and who I am."

He turned inboard slowly and faced her with a gravity she had not been aware of before. He took her by the elbows and held her firmly. She did not resist him. Indeed, she could not. For there was both strength and gentleness in his grasp. She felt herself drawn closer to him—closer to him because of that service.

"I have been a fool," he said. "I have talked to you as I have never talked before to a woman, letting you guess secrets that are a part of my work in Syria. Why did you make me talk? Don't you realize that if you tell what you have heard you may ruin me?"

"I—I'll never tell—Your secrets are safe with me."

"If you mean what you say, give me a pledge of your loyalty. Kiss me on the lips. It is the only thing that will do."

His grasp seemed to grow gentler as well as firmer and she slowly yielded. It was a kiss that seemed to have a more poignant meaning than the mere spirit of a pledge or a threat, and she forgot for the moment in that dim corner of the deck where they stood that it was only the day before yesterday that she had met him. Slowly she drew back, her head bent in a sudden realization of what had happened to her. He made no effort to hold her again, just stood, his arms at his sides.

She turned away for a moment to regain her composure and found that she was more shaken than she had thought.

"I—I—" she gasped, and then, as words failed her, thrust forth a hand—the hand of friendship. "I—I won't betray you," she said.

He had taken her hand quickly, but she broke away from him and moved, smiling, into the moonlight which seemed suddenly to make things clear to them both. It was the assurance of her smile that restored him to sanity. And her level brow and calm gaze seemed to convince him that she was not of those who kiss and tell.

"Don't you understand," she asked, "that I couldn't betray you now?"

He was silent, aware of a fine moment. "Thanks," he said. "And that was all of the incident. Extraordinary for Camilla—a mixture of the madness of the East of which he was a part and a kiss of earnest assurance that made the affair and its results inevitable."

"And now," she said, "it is time to turn in—"

"Until tomorrow." Camilla and Barker walked aft just as the figure of Nicholas Stephanov, the friend of Joseph Asad, emerged from the shadow where he was pacing the deck and smoking a last cigarette.

At the companionway to her stateroom Ronald Barker left her. "Good night," he said gently. "Be careful," she whispered. He laughed lightly and disappeared in the shadows.

Camilla went into her stateroom, closed and locked the door but did not switch on the light. She sat on the edge of her bed looking out of the French window and listening. Familiar sounds—the room steward fussing around with his dishes, the heavy tread of a deckhand of the mid-watch going the rounds, the ship's bell striking twice. She looked at her watch—one o'clock.

Sudan Schools Buy New Buses

Secretary Charley Nichols of the Sudan Independent School Board last week announced purchase of six new all-steel school buses and one additional new steel bus body for the Sudan school system.

All the buses are Chevrolet models of the latest type.

The buses were purchased outright, none of the old buses operated by the local schools being included in the trade.

The Sudan schools have been operating ten buses on regular schedule. The one all-steel bus from the old fleet will be retained in regular service, and with the six new buses and the new all-steel bus body, which is to be mounted on a chassis already owned by the local system, there will be eight modern-type buses in service this fall.

A ninth bus will be supplied from the old fleet, and will probably be in service on one of the short runs, Nichols said. Enlarged capacity of the new buses may permit operation of only nine buses in the fall, he said.

The new fleet of buses will probably be delivered in four or five weeks, Nichols announced. Delivery will be accepted at Jacksonville, Texas, and the buses will be driven to Sudan from that point. The new buses are built to carry between 42 and 45 passengers.

The SNOOPER SAYS...

Sam Batton, local manager of the Texas-New Mexico Utilities company, recently received a copy of a letter from Mr. B. Mitchell of England, which was written by Mr. Davis M. DeBard of New York City. Mr. Mitchell is a personal friend of Mr. DeBard's, who has visited England several times. In explanation of the letter, Mr. DeBard notes, "The Electric and Musical Industries, Hayes, England, in peace employ 10,000 workers. They are engaged in the manufacture of radios, Phonographs, Television, Electric Appliances, Bicycles, etc. Hayes is about 8 miles from the center of London. I have visited the factory several times. My last visit referred to being August, 1939, at which time I inspected bomb shelters numerous enough to shelter 10,000 workers."

We wish we had space to reprint the entire letter from Mr. Mitchell, but these excerpts, we hope will help you to understand the conditions that exist in England. We can read between the lines and realize the hardships that are inflicted upon the English peoples. But—this letter will also help us to realize that their morale is still high, even though private industry has been stopped, and truly they have, for the past year, had for their slogan, "All out for Defense."

When and if the time comes that similar conditions prevail in this great United States, we hope that our own people can and will say "All Out for Defense," and will be as calm about it as, apparently the British people are. After the last fire-side chat delivered by our great President, people in America cannot afford to do otherwise!

"...It seems quite a long time since you were at Hayes and I gave you a fleeting glance of the air raid shelters. They have had a great deal of use since then, mainly at night, it seems, always in a very bad weather. I am sometimes at the factory all night in charge of the home guard and I was very much impressed by the cheerful indifference of the work people, especially the women, about having to turn out several times and splash through the puddles without any kind of light, over the canal bridge and down into the shelters while air raids were taking place.

"We have now constructed an entirely new set of shelters, building them on to the side or up through the middle of the factory buildings so that people can get to shelter in a few seconds. They can thus stay at their work until something is happening right overhead.

"To help settle the question of working versus going to the shelters we asked people to volunteer to work and to wear a badge if they did so. The vast majority volunteered and the showing of so many badges was an answer to those who might be inclined to say that the Management were driving people into unreasonable danger.

"If you came along to the lunch room here, you would find many people you have met before. Some have joined the Services but the rest are active—now almost entirely on direct Government work. The radio business is having to dry up in order to give complete priority to War work and the same applied to household appliances. I doubt if you would notice any change in the appearance of our people. Some have lost a little weight due to cycling and gardening, but the effect of having their homes bombed does not seem to get them down. Actually we have all been very lucky here, and there have been only a very few casualties. In nearly all cases where a man's home has been wrecked in the night and he has some urgent jobs here in the morning, he turns up practically to time.

"On the other hand, if you were out in the street and could see little processions of people, carrying their few remaining bits and pieces from their bombed homes, through the rain, to some rest center, and if you saw that night after night for weeks you would feel pretty strongly about it. Poor people have very little margin on which to get started again after such a catastrophe and it is marvelous to me how cheerful they keep. Bad luck seems to follow some of them. They get bombed out of the East End of London and come out here—and often they are the ones to catch it when it is our turn for a raid; they go further west, and sure enough, it is their turn again.

"I suppose the biggest wrench affecting the nation as a whole is in abandoning all peace-time pursuits, ambitions and possessions, but it has been done on a vast scale and the only real grumbles are perfectly proper ones when it seems that there are inequalities of sacrifice. A man comes to realize that a whole lot of things don't matter after all; compared with the things that are really important.

"The government has complete power to take everybody and everything for the purposes of war. People have had to leave their homes and businesses, move to some other part of the country and find some other way of carrying on. These seem minor troubles in comparison with the concentrated, indiscriminate and ruthless destruction that comes from the sky, in the night. When it comes it has a devastating affect for a few days, but people's courage and determination returns in a very short time and the rest of the country repairs such damages as can be mended."

Ending the letter, Mr. Mitchell wrote of his own family, a son who was flying a fighter in the Fleet Air Arm, and his two daughters, and his wife... and as a post script he added that he had just received word that his son was killed in a flying accident near Camelford in Cornwall, while he was flying a Gladiator.

The horrors of war... But it is consoling that the people in our Mother country can keep up their courage, despite the terrific invasions... and—although bombs are not hurled upon us... the American people have other dangers...

and we still can have faith in our Creator to give us the courage and determination to fight life's battles, just as the people in England are doing today!

the ROAD AHEAD

Old Man Texas is today looking ahead and planning.

Beside the great farming and ranching country which Texans have built, he sees a new industrial empire here.

Already the start has been made. Some industries, such as petroleum, are now showing what can be done to utilize Texas' vast natural resources. Today this industry refines with Texas labor over four-fifths as much oil as the State produces. Its products make up nearly one-half of all Texas manufacturing. Altogether petroleum provides the living for almost one-sixth of our people.

But this is only a beginning.

Texas has many other raw materials, unexcelled by any other State. Texas has in oil and gas the cheap and dependable fuel supply essential to industry. Texas is the gateway to Latin America, our new foreign market.

Each new industry means more jobs. It makes added tax values for our State and local governments, bigger payrolls for our workers, and greater prosperity for you and every other Texan.

New Liquor Law Awaits Settlement

Enforcement of the new law tightening restrictions on sale of liquor by prescription awaits settlement of a temporary injunction restraining the state liquor control board from carrying out the provisions of the measure.

The injunction was issued by Judge Max M. Rogers of the district court at Huntsville.

Liquor administrator Bert Ford said that the provisions of the order would be strictly observed, but he warned drug stores that any sale of prescription whisky would be made at their own risk.

The injunction in no way affects the additional tax of 22 cents on liquor, levied under the omnibus bill, Ford declared.

TWO MILLION TREES, SHRUBS FURNISHED

More than two million trees and shrubs were furnished this spring to farmers and ranchers in the Southern Great Plains by the Soil Conservation Service for erosion control plantings, according to an announcement by H. H. Finnell, Regional Director of the Service at Amarillo.

The tree and shrub planting stock were supplied to farmers and ranchers who are cooperating with the Service or with soil conservation districts. The trees were planted largely in gullies and waste areas that are being retired from cultivation to stop soil washing, and as windbreaks around farmsteads and field boundaries to help check wind erosion.

Two of the powerful Buicks are series 70 Roadmaster Convertible Coupes powered by compound carbureted 165 horsepower engines

The 3 cars were in almost constant official use during the preliminary speed trials now under way at the track and during the big race on Memorial day were parked together on the apron at the starting line in readiness for official use.

The cars are made available to the AAA officials by the Buick division of General Motors following an annual custom established three years ago.
