Oil And Agriculture

Last Week T. L. Fontaine, president of the Texas Junior Chamber of Commerce, in his address before the local Rotary club, announced that the paramount issues to be discussed at the state convention which meets next month at Ft. Worth, will be oil and agriculture, the main industries of Texas.

Both industries are—at this time, subject to much study and regulation. The farmer's situation in Texas is one that demands immediate consideration and action. There has been no visible movement toward diversification and the cotton farmer continues to delude himself with the thought of everlasting charity from Washington-Time and again—we have tried in our own feeble way, to issue warning notes; Government agencies have made every effort to caution farmers, and the press of the entire nation is continuously sounding the alarm.

From the actions of the present Congress—it appears that even before the change in administration, there will be sharp curtailments in Federal appropriations and grants. It's a pretty safe bet that most of the Texas farmers will be unprepared for this withdrawal of government aid.

After all—subsidies and parities were instituted as aids to help indigent farmers weather low prices and failing markets; they were never intended as permanent gratuities. Unless the cotton raisers make up their minds to rotate their crops and go back to livestock breeding—they will—before very long, find themselves in far worse shape than they were in when F. D. R. first started to toss billions at them.

Some 1,100 representative young business and professional men, representing 70 chapters of the state organization, will seriously consider ways and means for preventing serious disaster in the agricultural setup of Texas. It is to be hoped that they will succeed at least—in bringing home to our farmers, the dangers that lie ahead of them.

The Governor's Book on Texas

Bearing the name of Governor O'Daniel as its author, there has just been issued an impressive book with the title, "Possibilities for Industrial Development in Texas."

Every resident of this state should read the book to gain a comprehension of the vast resources of Texas which exist at present largely in the form of raw wealth which is shipped to other states and countries to be made into finished products. The opportunity for industrial development in Texas is brought more vividly home to Texas people by the Governor's booklet. In fact, the reformulation of facts, already known to many persons but forgotten or pigeonholed, should not only be a challenge to the people of this state but also should be a persuasive appeal to their ambitions, imaginations and convictions to take a hand in the golden opportunity of industrialization of Texas.

The only possible verdict from the factual content in the Governor's book is that the people of Texas have been asleep or indifferent to the opportunity for industrial progress that lies on every side. If Texas people are incompetent to take advantage of such opportunities, they should recognize that fact and "import" men, money and other essentials needed to carry out a program of industrialization. But since, as the Governor points out, Texas has adequate capital and other means for development, our failure is probably due to a lack of leadership imaginative enough to take advantage of the rich opportunity.

I notice that one of the feature attractions at the Fat Stock Show is an expert Knife Thrower. I don't see any sense in going as far as Fort Worth to view a knife throwing exposition. If my memory serves me right—I have encountered quite a few knife throwers and needle pitchers, even in places far removed from tanbark and box offices. Oh, yes, this knife thrower distinguishes himself by barely missing the man or woman in front of him. I have posed (involuntarily) for quite a few knife throwers, and not once—did they miss me.

Last week—The Internal Revenue department ruled that donations to the Red Cross were deductible from income tax returns. It seems a pity that most of the newspapers presented this item in a very small way. It was pure accident that I noticed the small three-line story. Why not play it up in a headline manner. Maybe it would attract the attention of a few rich fellows who might wish to cheat the government out of that money by donating to the Red Cross. I'm in favor of helping the Red Cross cash these exemptions. It might quite a few million dollars in funds. So please help by spreading this good news.

The wealthy foster parents Wetherill both die she telling that she has adopted her own parents couldn't afford both of them and her real name is Dorothy Gay. In the world, but with a fortune of her own, she considers looking after her own family whom she never seen. A neighbor, Evan Brower, tries to argue her out of it but she loves her and asks her to marry him. She promises to marry him but decides first to find out about her family. She goes to their home and finds that they are destitute and resents her offer of help. Finally, after many explanations, she agrees to take money to help and food in order to save her life. Her father comes home and hungry but hurries to build a fire and get warm. Her brother Ted is resentful of her being there at first, but when he finds she has done both he and she decide they like their new studied her for an instant and he said gravely:

"We can't live off of you! We need of you to help us out a little. We got on our feet, but we can't keep on letting you feed us. Perhaps I can get a job soon and pay you back."

"Brightness went out of Marjorie's face.

"Well, Ted, if I had lived here, you had plenty, wouldn't you have shared it with me?"

"Of course," said Ted crossly, "that's different! I'm a fella!"

"Well, that's all right, 'fella' but it isn't different. I'm a part of this family, unless you throw me out, and what's mine is yours."

"Now, come, I'd like to say a word about what you did to me when you first came in. You took up tickets away and told me they wouldn't interest me. But they interest me. They interest me very much. They're pawn tickets, aren't they? Well, what are we going to do about them, Ted? Are those mother's things that she's fond of? Oughtn't we to go and get them?"

"They're her things. They're all the things she has. And she couldn't get new things even if she did want them. She can't get these either," he added dejectedly. "I tell you it costs a lot of money."

"Yes, but how much, Ted?" persisted Marjorie.

"It isn't your responsibility," said Ted doggedly. "It's mine. I pawned them."

"Now look here, Ted, you just stop pushing me out of the family like that. Now you reach up to that top shelf and take down that teacup and we'll add those tickets up and see what it comes to. Please!"

Half shyly Ted did her bidding.

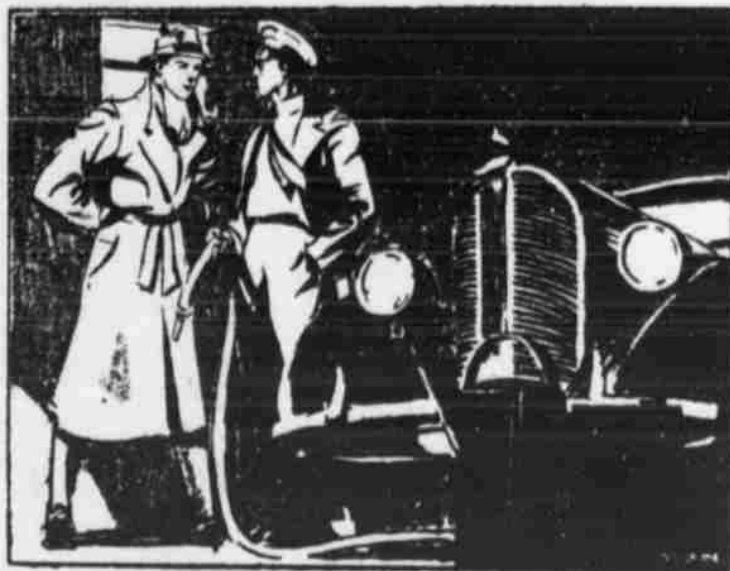

They got out the tickets and Marjorie added them all up, a pitiful ous. Mother hates that! Having them all find out just what we've got and what we haven't. You know we used to have a nice home over in a suburb on the other side of the city. Nice big house, built of stone. Plenty of room. We each had a room to ourselves, and there was a garage and a big garden, and flowers and fruit trees. It was a swell place. And dad had a position with a good salary. That was before the depression, you know."

"Oh, my dear!" said Marjorie quite honestly crying now. "My dear! I'm so sorry you've been going through all that!"

"Well, don't bawl!" said Ted crossly, brushing his hand over his own eyes. "I can't stand howling! I just told ya because I thought you'd wanta know. We haven't always been down and out this way. We had a swell home!"

"Well, now let's make this one as cheerful as we can before we-

fully small sum it seemed to the girl, to represent the household goods of a home, but to the boy a breath-taking fortune.

"Is that all?" said Marjorie when he handed her the sum. "Why, I can give you that right away."

"But I can't bring them till after five," said Ted. "That will be after dark, too. The neighbors are so curning," said Marjorie taking a deep breath. "I'll get the money!"

She went into the parlor to her handbag that she had left on the bare little high mantel shelf and brought back a roll of bills that made Ted's eyes open wide.

"I put in a little extra," said his sister smiling. "I thought perhaps you'd think of something we need that I've forgotten."

"Goah!" said Ted gazing down at the roll of bills in his hand. "Don't know's I can trust myself out alone. I might get held up carrying all this wealth."

The boy grinned. "I can see where you're going to spoil us for living again when you're gone."

"Gone!" said Marjorie with dismay in her voice. "Do you want me to go?"

"No, not on your life! But you're not going to stick around these diggings. Not with the home you've been used to! Say!" he added irrelevantly, "you look a lot like Betty, and yet you don't. I could tell you apart already! You don't look quite so frowsy as Betty, and you've got a cute little quirk in the corners of your mouth. Maybe Betty would look like that too if she hadn't had to work so hard, and have such a lot of trouble."

"You're sweet!" said Marjorie, and suddenly reached up with a quick motion and kissed her new brother on his lean hard young cheek.

Then he turned sharply away toward the window and she saw him brush his hand across his eyes, and swallow hard.

"You're aw'right," he said grudgingly.

"Thanks awfully!" said Marjorie, trying to enter into his spirit. "But who is that coming in the door?"

"That's Bud," said Ted, peering through the crack into the hall. "Hey, Kid! Hush up there! Dad and muth's asleep!"

A boy about 10 came panting into the room, so out of breath he could scarcely articulate.

"They—sent me—ta tell ya—!" he panted. "You gotta come right away an' get the kids. Bonnie's got a fever—an' she—wouldn't eat her cereal—an' she is crying for Betty—an' Sunny is yellin' his head off!"

"Okay, you come with me, Kid. We'll get 'em," said Ted, "but I don't know what we'll do with 'em here. Goah! Can you beat it!" He cast an apologetic eye at his new sister.

"What is it?" she asked puzzled.

"Who are they?"

"The kids!" answered the brother in astonishment. "Didn't you know about them?"

"No!" said Marjorie. "Oh, I remember, Betty said something when I first came about taking the children somewhere, but I had forgotten about it. I didn't realize there were more of us."

"Two besides Bud?" said Ted lifting his chin maturely and sighing. "I don't know how we're going to make the grade with any more sick folks."

Marjorie gave a little gasp of amazement and then her soft lips set firmly.

"We'll manage!" she said. "I'll go with you to get them. I can carry one of them."

They walked along almost a block before Marjorie spoke again and a great shyness was possessing Ted.

Then they arrived at the neighborhood creche and Ted led the way in.

About that time back at Marjorie's home in Chicago Evan Brower was standing at the front door impatiently ringing the doorbell!

Since he had left her, Evan Brower had been vaguely disturbed by Marjorie's attitude, and wished he had stayed, in spite of her request that he go and let her think things over. He should have reasoned with her right the hand there.

He had never considered Marjorie Wetherill impulsive before, but now he recalled a certain look in her eyes as she had spoken of her own people, that smacked of fanaticism.

Also, she was young and utterly without experience in financial affairs, and here she was suddenly left with a fairly large fortune, and menaced by a family of unknown quantity and quality.

These thoughts had been milling about in his brain all day as he drove from one appointment to the other and then back to his home city, coming straight out to Wetherill's instead of going to the office first.

He walked around the house to the garage where he found the chauffeur out washing the car.

"What is the reason I cannot get any answer to my ring?" he asked severely. He was the kind of young man who always required perfect service, and usually got it.

The chauffeur looked up from his work deferentially, recognizing a friend of the family.

"Why, sir, they're all away for the holidays. Miss Wetherill went last night and gave all the servants a holiday while she is gone. Very kind of her, sir. She's always kind."

"Indeed!" said Evan Brower as if it were somehow the chauffeur's fault.

"You don't know where she's gone? Haven't you her address?"

"No, sir, I haven't."

Evan Brower frowned. This was really serious. What a fool he had been not to make Marjorie sit down and listen to him the other night!

Evan Brower got into his car and drove away in much dissatisfaction.

So! She had gone. Headstrong little girl! Impetuous! He hadn't thought she was like that. If he married her, and he had practically committed himself to that course, he would certainly have to train that out of her.

Marjorie had slipped neatly through his fingers and gone her own way in spite of his protests. He would try the letter carrier and post office of course, though they were not supposed to give such information.

But the post office when consulted said they were to hold all mail for further orders. She had left no address.

Well, somehow he must get in touch with her.

So he went his way, and made his plans for going after Marjorie when the right moment should come, and that would be the first minute he knew where to find her.

He went out and bought a delightful Christmas gift for her. He even went so far as to look at engagement rings.

The more he thought about it the more his thoughts became intrigued with the girl who was so sweet and unspoiled. How easily she could be molded to fit the environment in which she would live if she were his wife.

Then, he reflected, Marjorie had always been fond of his company, had been ready to accept his invitations always, although until recently he had taken her out very little. There was no reason thinkable why she should not want to marry him.

And it was quite the appropriate thing for him to marry her. More and more as he turned it over in his mind his common sense as well as his inclination approved the plan. And it was comfortable to think of the girl of his choice being utterly unspoiled by contact with the world. There had been no other man in her life, he was sure of that. He

And dad had a position with a good salary. That was before the depression, you know."

"Oh, my dear!" said Marjorie quite honestly crying now. "My dear! I'm so sorry you've been going through all that!"

"Well, don't bawl!" said Ted crossly, brushing his hand over his own eyes. "I can't stand bawling! I just told ya because I thought you'd wanta know. We haven't always been down and out this way. We had a swell home!"

"Well, now let's make this one as cheerful as we can before eve-

You don't know where she's gone?"

fully small sum it seemed to the girl, to represent the household goods of a home, but to the boy a breath-taking fortune.

"Is that all?" said Marjorie when he handed her the sum. "Why, I can give you that right away."

"But I can't bring them till after five," said Ted. "That will be after dark, too. The neighbors are so curning," said Marjorie taking a deep breath. "I'll get the money!"

She went into the parlor to her handbag that she had left on the bare little high mantel shelf and brought back a roll of bills that made Ted's eyes open wide.

"I put in a little extra," said his sister smiling. "I thought perhaps you'd think of something we need that I've forgotten."

"Gosh!" said Ted gazing down at the roll of bills in his hand. "Don't know's I can trust myself out alone. I might get held up carrying all this wealth."

The boy grinned. "I can see where you're going to spoil us for living again when you're gone."

"Gone!" said Marjorie with dismay in her voice. "Do you want me to go?"

"No, not on your life! But you're not going to stick around those diggings. Not with the home you've been used to! Say!" he added irrelevantly, "you look a lot like Betts, and yet you don't. I could tell you apart already! You don't look quite so frowsy as Betty, and you've got a cute little quirk in the corners of your mouth. Maybe Betty would look like that too if she hadn't had to work so hard, and have such a lot of trouble."

"You're sweet!" said Marjorie, and suddenly reached up with a quick motion and kissed her new brother on his lean hard young cheek.

Then he turned sharply away toward the window and she saw him brush his hand across his eyes, and swallow hard.

"You're aw'right," he said grudgingly.

"Thanks aw'fully!" said Marjorie, trying to enter into his spirit. "But who is that coming in the door?"

"That's Bud," said Ted, peering through the crack into the hall. "Hey, Kid! Hush up there! Dad and muth's asleep!"

A boy about 10 came panting into the room, so out of breath he could scarcely articulate.

"They—sent me—ta tell ya—!" he panted. "You gotta come right away an' get the kids. Bonnie's got a fever—an' she—wouldn't eat her cereal—an' she is crying for Betty—an' Sunny is yellin' his head off!"

"Okay, you come with me, Kid. We'll get 'em," said Ted, "but I don't know what we'll do with 'em here. Gosh! Can you beat it?" He cast an apologetic eye at his new sister.

"What is it?" she asked puzzled.

"Who are they?"

"The kids!" answered the brother in astonishment. "Didn't you know about them?"

"No!" said Marjorie. "Oh, I remember, Betty said something when I first came about taking the children somewhere, but I had forgotten about it. I didn't realize there were more of us."

"Two besides Bud?" said Ted lifting his chin maturely and sighing. "I don't know how we're going to make the grade with any more sick folks."

Marjorie gave a little gasp of amazement and then her soft lips set firmly.

"We'll manage!" she said. "I'll go with you to get them. I can carry one of them."

They walked along almost a block before Marjorie spoke again and a great shyness was possessing Ted.

Then they arrived at the neighborhood creche and Ted led the way in.

About that time back at Marjorie's home in Chicago Evan Brower was standing at the front door impatiently ringing the doorbell!

Since he had left her, Evan Brower had been vaguely disturbed by Marjorie's attitude, and wished he had stayed, in spite of her request that he go and let her think things over. He should have reasoned with her right the hand there.

He had never considered Marjorie Wetherill impulsive before, but now he recalled a certain look in her eyes as she had spoken of her own people, that smacked of fanaticism.

Also, she was young and utterly without experience in financial affairs, and here she was suddenly left with a fairly large fortune, and menaced by a family of unknown quantity and quality.

These thoughts had been milling about in his brain all day as he drove from one appointment to the other and then back to his home city, coming straight out to Wetherill's instead of going to the office first.

He walked around the house to the garage where he found the chauffeur out washing the car.

"What is the reason I cannot get any answer to my ring?" he asked severely. He was the kind of young man who always required perfect service, and usually got it.

The chauffeur looked up from his work deferentially, recognizing a friend of the family.

"Why, sir, they're all away for the holidays. Miss Wetherill went last night and gave all the servants

a holiday while she is gone. Very kind of her, sir. She's always kind."

"Indeed!" said Evan Brower as if it were somehow the chauffeur's fault.

"You don't know where she's gone? Haven't you her address?"

"No, sir, I haven't."

Evan Brower frowned. This was really serious. What a fool he had been not to make Marjorie sit down and listen to him the other night!

Evan Brower got into his car and drove away in much dissatisfaction.

So! She had gone. Headstrong little girl! Impetuous! He hadn't thought she was like that. If he married her, and he had practically committed himself to that course, he would certainly have to train that out of her.

Marjorie had slipped neatly through his fingers and gone her own way in spite of his protests. He would try the letter carrier and post office of course, though they were not supposed to give such information.

But the post office when consulted said they were to hold all mail for further orders. She had left no address.

Well, somehow he must get in touch with her.

So he went his way, and made his plans for going after Marjorie when the right moment should come, and that would be the first minute he knew where to find her.

He went out and bought a delightful Christmas gift for her. He even went so far as to look at engagement rings.

The more he thought about it the more his thoughts became intrigued with the girl who was so sweet and unspoiled. How easily she could be molded to fit the environment in which she would live if she were his wife.

Then, he reflected, Marjorie had always been fond of his company, had been ready to accept his invitations always, although until recently he had taken her out very little. There was no reason thinkable why she should not want to marry him.

And it was quite the appropriate thing for him to marry her. More and more as he turned it over in his mind his common sense as well as his inclination approved the plan. And it was comfortable to think of the girl of his choice being utterly unspoiled by contact with the world. There had been no other man in her life, he was sure of that. He

CHRISTINE CARPENTER TO PLAY WITH SOUTH PLAINS ALL STARS IN GAME AT COOPER SATURDAY WHEN RED HEADS PLAY

Conceded to be positively the best girls' basketball game of the season, Littlefield will be represented at Cooper Saturday, March 18, when South Plains stars will clash with the famous All-American Red Heads, the world's champion girls' basketball club.

Miss Christine Carpenter, forward on the Littlefield Kitties' team, will play with five other girls from five South Plains towns, Miss Lillian Baker, coach, will accompany other members of the local team to Cooper Saturday.

The Cooper school is located at Goodrow, 10 miles south of Lubbock.

The Red Heads, including stars from seven states in the Union, are wonder athletes who are six feet tall, and world champions. They have played in Lubbock and other South Plains towns. They play under men's straight rules, and this team is the only one of its kind in America. Admission prices will be 25 cents and 40 cents, and Miss Baker has tickets to the game for sale.

The South Plains stars are expected to look well. This section of Texas plays the fastest brand of girls' basketball in the state. Littlefield teams have certainly done much to set this standard, and in the person of Miss Carpenter, star of the locals past season 52 game winner club, Littlefield contributes much to the all-star line-up.

The Red Heads feature two former Olympic players, one of whom, Miss Gladys Lommler, was recently pictured in "Believe it or Not." They have played together for several seasons, and these All-Americans play a game fast enough to defeat many of the finest mens teams.

In an April issue, Life magazine will devote two full pages to these Red Heads.

ODDFELLOWS AND REBEKAHS TO HONOR SCHUYLER COLFAX MONDAY AND TUESDAY, MARCH 20 AND 21

Schuyler Colfax, one of America's earliest advocates of equal rights for women and the man to whom Abraham Lincoln said his last farewell, will be honored Monday and Tuesday nights, March 20 and 21, by Littlefield members of the Independent Order of Oddfellows and Rebekah assemblies.

Colfax, born of sturdy revolutionary stock on March 23, 1823, in New York City, won fame in Odd Fellowship in 1850. The order was hotly divided over the question of some sort of special degree for wives and daughters of Odd Fellows.

Colfax, disregarding the advice of his elder colleagues, championed women's rights. He led his minority side to victory and in 1851 the Grand Lodge voted by narrow margin to institute the degree — now called the Rebekah degree. It was women's first recognition by a large fraternal order. Colfax wrote the degree himself and it stands today as a monumental piece of ceremonial writing.

In March, 1869, Colfax was inducted into office as vice president of the United States with President U. S. Grant. He was requested to be a candidate for the presidency in 1870 but declined and retired to private life.

He was in great demand as a lecturer. He devoted much of the remainder of his life to furthering the cause of Odd Fellowship, making many trips and addresses. The Rebekah Order, which he had virtually founded, claimed his particular attention.

On Jan. 13, 1885, he was in a railway station in Mankota, Minn., on his way to deliver a lecture. The mercury stood at 30 degrees below zero. He sat down on a bench, turned pale and died suddenly. The nation mourned his death and on his casket was engraved in silver the Three Links symbol of Odd Fellowship, the cause he had served so long and well.

In 1932 the Association of Rebekah Assemblies took formal action to honor him for his pioneer work in bringing that order into being. At their request, the Grand Lodge set aside March 23 as "Schuyler Colfax Day" to be observed in every lodge.

The Littlefield Rebekahs and Odd Fellows will hold regular meetings, beginning at 8 o'clock, Monday and Tuesday nights.

would not have to worry about any youthful indiscretion. Innocent and lovely, that was what she was, and very likely he had been the ideal man in her eyes.

Not that he had always had one ideal of womanhood, himself; but of course men were different. It was man's part to choose, and naturally, he had considered other girls, but had never been quite satisfied.

He began to think back to his first consciousness of Marjorie, when she had come home from college after graduation.

He remembered her as she sat in church, across the aisle, a row in front of where he was sitting with his mother. He had been struck with her beauty then, and wondered that he had never seen it before.

He had watched her during the service, as she gave attention to the sermon; her sweet seriousness attracted him strongly.

This difference they had had the last time he had talked with her, about hunting up her own people, had been the first unwise decision he had ever seen her make.

In the meantime his mind was making itself up very definitely that Marjorie was desirable. The more so as he discovered through an old friend and confidante of the Wetherill family that an unusually large number of shares of a very valuable stock were a part of the Wetherill estate which Marjorie had inherited. Marjorie had a lot of money and needed the right man to look after it. And he was convinced that he was the right man.

That was the day he selected the great blue diamond engagement ring. But Marjorie was walking along a sordid back street holding the thin cold hand of a little new brother who was crying. Marjorie suddenly swooped down and swept the youngster into her arms. She had never had much to do with children before, but she was quite strong and held him firmly.

FREEDOM OF ACTION

You know how it is—when you can slip into a house dress that's absolutely comfortable and looks well besides. This design (8402) has exactly the details necessary for freedom of action. The waistline can be made as snug as you please, by means of the half-belts fastened in the back. But it will never catch you up short, when you're diving under the sink to retrieve a spoon, dusting down the stairs, or reaching into the farthest corner of a closet shelf.

In calico, percale, gingham or linen, it will be the perfect work dress! And of course it's quick and easy to make.

Pattern No. 8402 is designed for sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, and 48. Size 36 requires 5 1-8 yards of 35 inch material; 2 1-4 yards of braid.

Pattern 8407—This dress, you see, is cut on a true princess line in the back—long, unbroken, very slenderizing. The bodice in front is tucked on the shoulder and eased just above the waistline, to prevent any unsightly smugness.

Pattern No. 8407 is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50 and 52. With long sleeves, size 38 requires 5 yards of 39 inch material. With short sleeves 4 3-4 yards; 1 1-4 yards of trimming.

SUDAN IRRIGATION RATE GOES INTO EFFECT APRIL 1

The irrigation rate will go into effect April 1 in Sudan for water purchased from the City of Sudan, according to Mayor A. Stuart.

The new rate, which was used last summer, sets a minimum amount of water at 10,000 gallons for only $2.50. Above that the charge is only 15 cents a 1,000 gallons. This amounts to a big savings and gives the customers about twice as much water, if it is used for irrigation.

In order to get this reduction the user must sign a contract at the city hall. Mayor Stuart urges that you sign up at your earliest convenience.

Storing Water in Soil Like Putting Money in Bank

Lamesa, Texas, March 10.—Storing water in the soil is just like putting money in the bank, in the opinion of T. A. Kellam, who produced 97 bales of cotton on 164 acres of his farm five miles southeast of Lamesa, although rainfall during the 1938 growing season was less than a half inch.

"Conservation of moisture enabled me to obtain a uniform crop stand and the yield was considerably above the average although the rainfall was far below normal," Kellam declares. "If the terraces on my field had been constructed in time to have held the fall rains, I am sure my yields would have been greater."

In addition to producing good crops under adverse conditions, Kellam also has checked erosion on his 620-acre farm. Gullying was becoming a serious problem and small soil drifts from wind erosion were being formed when Kellam sought the aid of the soil conservation service CCC camp at Lamesa in January, 1938.

Surveys revealed Kellam had been using good farming practices, but that the lack of conservation methods was permitting run-off water from adjacent fields and roads to cut gullies on his farm.

The cultivated land was terraced in January, 1938, to hold all the water on the land where it fell and also to check the flow of the run-off water from nearby areas. Check dams were constructed in the gullies, and contour furrows were constructed on the range land.

Sudan grass was broadcast on the terraces to strengthen the structures, and a strip-crop system of farming was adopted with 40 rows of cotton being alternated with strips of grain sorghum ranging from 10 to 20 rows in width.

"I planted my cotton between June 7 and June 11," Kellam recalls. "Moisture stored in the soil by the terraces holding all the water on the land resulted in a uniform crop stand. Although there was less than a half inch of rain on my land during the growing season, I was able to produce profitable crops. I believe my yields would have been much greater if the terraces had been available for holding moisture from the fall rains."

Kellam hand-headed his sorghums and left a high stubble which was not grazed during the winter. This stubble now is providing protection from the force of the strong winds. The gullies are disappearing and the entire field is becoming relatively level, Kellam reports. He believes that the use of conservation practices has resulted in his farm being stabilized against loss of soil by both wind and water.

R. P. Loper, aged 10, son of Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Loper, was unfortunate enough to have his foot cut in a stalkcutter recently.

The child was cutting stalks at the farm of his father at Cotton Center, when his left foot received a bad gash. He was brought to the Littlefield hospital, where Dr. Thos. B. Duke was obliged to take nine stitches to close the wound.

He was brought in again Friday for observation, but the wound was not sufficiently healed to allow the physician to take out the stitches. However, these were taken out the first part of this week.

Rock Fence Makes V. S. Cassel Home More Attractive

The yard at the home of Mr. and Mrs. V. S. Cassel on East Third street has been landscaped and a rock fence is being built around the lawn. The rocks were brought recently from San Jon, N. M., north of Clovis, and Mr. Cassel says that the fence will protect the lawn from the sand, as the place is located on a corner. A fish pond is being built in the back yard, with sidewalks on each side of the house and in the back. Trellis has been placed for vines, and Mrs. Cassel will plant flowers around the house. and at an inquest, Justice of Peace T. E. Wall of Cotton Center ruled that Moody shot White "voluntarily and with malice aforethought."

Enroute to Hale Center

According to testimony of Frank Casey, negro hired hand of White, he and the death victim were going to Hale Center, in a truck, and stopped at Cotton Center.

Moody and L. B. Young, gin manager, were sitting in the former's coupe near O'Hair's grocery store. Young went into the grocery when White got out of the truck, the negro said at an inquest.

"What's this I hear you've been saying about me?" White was quoted as saying.

Then "don't talk to me like that" when Moody replied.

A shot followed and White fell to the ground, the negro said.

Although those near the scene maintained almost complete silence regarding the tragedy, authorities said they had been informed that Moody had failed to prepare his land in an attempt to control blowing of dust upon adjacent properties.

White Funeral Today

Funeral services for Mr. White are to be held this afternoon at 2 o'clock in Cotton Center. Burial will be in the Hale Center cemetery. He is survived by his widow, a son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Harmon White, and a daughter, Lyndell. Mrs. Harmon White is a sister of Lowell Short, Littlefield lumberman.

Moody is a bachelor.

Prominent Farmers

Moody and White were men of outstanding prominence in the Cotton Center community, Moody having resided there for approximately 30 years, and White for about 15 years. Both were extensive landowners.

Mr. White was a member of the Cotton Center school board of trustees, and of the Hale county farm committee. He was a member of the Cotton Center Baptist church, and was active in civic and community affairs.

Both men were well known in Littlefield, having visited here on numerous occasions.

MORE THAN 200 LAMB COUNTY FARMERS HAVE SECURITY NOW THROUGH REHABILITATION PROGRAM

Farm and home inventories, budgets and accounts are helping over 200 Lamb county farm families chart their course to greater security through the rehabilitation program of the Farm Security Administration, Oleta Cole, FSA supervisor, Littlefield, reports.

Each family receiving an FSA loan for necessary livestock, farm equipment, household goods or other operating items agrees to keep careful records to guide its enterprise and place the farm on a business-like basis. This forms the basis for placing in effect practical farm and home plans that will insure maximum returns for the year's operations.

Starting out with a complete inventory of land, equipment, livestock, feed, seed and household goods, quickly reveals what operating goods will be needed for the year, determines the farm and home plans and provide for an accurate check of these facilities at the end of each year.

Budgets serve as the road map for the farm and home plans. Income and expenditures based on normal yields and prices for livestock and crop production are carefully estimated to determine how much can safely be spent for new equipment, building repairs, livestock and similar items as well as for clothing, transportation, medical care, food staples, recreation and insurance.

Daily records of receipts and expenditures, compared each month with the farm and home budgets provide a quick check as to the progress being made and indicate savings can be made or receipts increased for the following month. Adjustments in farm and home plans can quickly be made where unexpected emergencies occur.

FSA Farmers Are Cooperating With Use of Farm Machinery

The Farm Security Administration announced this week that more than 7,000 groups of small farmers had borrowed a total of $4,404,132 to purchase equipment and services for group use from the beginning of its Community Service Loan program in July, 1936, to Jan. 1, 1939.

T. Euel Limer, county farm supervisor, said there were 64 cooperatives in the part of Texas included in Region XI of the FSA, with loans amounting to $30,829.30. There is one operating in Lamb county at the present and they hope to have at least one more operating in the very near future.

Such loans have enabled 128,856 farm families, composing 7,183 borrowing groups, to expand and improve the efficiency of their farming operations through purchase of equipment or services not previously available in their communities. These services include combines, silage cutters, Purebred sites, cold storage plants, bulldozers and terracing equipment, syrup mills, hay balers, hatcheries and tractors.

These loans, financing group purchase and use of equipment which no single individual could afford, have enabled small farm operators to compete on more equal terms with the large, mechanized corporation farms. Such loans have also been used to purchase canning, laundry, and sewing equipment to lighten the burden of the farm home work.

Average size of the loans made during the first three and one-half years of FSA's program has been $594.51 per group, or $34.10 for each farmer participating. The loans may be retired over a period of five years and bear 3 per cent interest. They are available only to needy and low-income farmers, who cannot obtain adequate credit from any other source.

Full details of the Community and Cooperative service loans may be obtained at the county office of the Farm Security Administration or by writing L. C. Holm, division chief, Farm Security Administration, Amarillo, Texas.

Report $97,885,000 Represents Benefits Under AAA Program

The cash that Texas farmers and ranchmen are scheduled to receive from the AAA, to reward their contribution in 1938 to the conservation of agricultural resources, would purchase a $5 pair of shoes and a large sack of flour for every person in Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and Arkansas.

The estimated total, according to the AAA's annual report for Texas, is $97,885,000.

That, according to George Slaughter, chairman of the Texas Agricultural Conservation Committee of the AAA with state headquarters here, includes $68,700,000 in cotton conservation and price adjustment payments, and other conservation payments amounting to $12,100,000 on general soil-depleting crops, such as corn and grain sorghums; $100,000 on peanuts; $3,600,000 on wheat; $485,000 on rice; $4,900,000 for soil-building practices, such as terracing and planting green manure crops; $4,900,000 for range conservation, and $4,000,000 to increase individual payments of less than $200.

While compliance with the 1938 program has not been checked completely, the annual report is projected to show that the number of payees will run close to 615,000 and that about $38,687,580 acres of cropland will be covered by applications for conservation grants.

Earl M. McClure Offers Resignation As Scout Executive

Bringing three years of successful work as executive of South Plains Boy Scout council to a close, resignation of Earl M. McClure was tendered and accepted to the council executive board at a meeting in Hilton hotel, Lubbock, Thursday night, according to Dr. F. B. Malone, council president.

Succeeding McClure will be Jack O. Stone, executive of the Port Arthur district. Stone will go to Lubbock April 1, Dr. Malone said.
