

Conservative Use Of Irrigation Water Is Urged

Take a glass of water and draw near the rim, draw part of the water, the level liquid goes down. If you take two draws, one on each side of the glass, with two people drinking, the level goes down twice as fast.

The water level builds up again as nature replenishes the supply. If you sink two wells in the same area, the water level declines at a faster rate.

HOW TO GET GOOD WELLS. Farmers are learning that location of their well—in relation to others—is a major factor in getting a good well.

For one thing, close spacing of wells sets up a sort of fight, which experts call mutual interference. The same experts, after extensive studies, came to the conclusion that in areas where the water level has declined, close spacing of wells has been in a large part to blame.

In places where there are a lot of irrigation wells, farmers always are experiencing the usual interference problem. When two wells are close together, sometimes the well which starts pumping first gets all the water. When it shuts down, the other well can get water. That means that if the wells belong to two different farmers, they have to work together to figure out a fair system of taking turns—or else they have to relocate their wells.

Some farmers don't need experts to tell them about spacing. They've learned it the hard, expensive way, by having to move wells or lower pumps or by having to drill in unfavorable low spots to avoid interference and then piping the water up to high spots for distribution.

A county agent reports that several years ago, before these studies were made, he located five wells "within a stone's throw of each other." Today only two of those wells are producing. Figure the loss. Proper spacing could have prevented it.

With the increase in drilling activities—some counties are getting from 75 to 100 new wells each month—more attention must be given to proper well spacing for the protection of all.

Getting back to the glass of water and two straws. Suppose one person decided to save his water. If the other one keeps on drinking, he eventually drinks up what is being saved.

Here again, the same things apply to irrigation. If one farmer, or a group of farmers, decide to practice conservation by proper well spacing, waste prevention and re-charging, the water they save can be used up by others who are pumping from the same water basin.

The water we are using for irrigation on the High Plains all comes from the same big reservoir. If we conserve it, we have to get our neighbors to conserve it, too. Otherwise they can waste what we have saved.

Conservation doesn't mean just saving in the strict sense of the word, like putting something away and not using it. It means putting it to the best possible use, using as small amounts as we can to the best advantage, and making it last as long as possible.

Calvin Stresses 'Better Homes' Address

Dr. B. H. Rucker Named District Vice-President

Importance of love and discipline in the raising of children was stressed by Dr. Ross Rucker of St. James Episcopal Church of Clovis, N. M., in his address to the District 2 meeting at the Home Demonstration held in the First Baptist Church Tuesday.

"I think of the perfect home as the home in which there was love and discipline," he said, regarding the theme of the meeting, "Homes Make For A Better World."

It is that divorce attacks families last which are based on principles.

Dr. Rucker said that economic status has little to do with whether a child is underprivileged or not, but that the important factor is the mother.

On the same theme he said, "I'm throwing a brick at Mother's feet. Calvin did not feel that a woman is a mother until she is honored. 'To be a mother is not much at all,' he said, 'to be a good mother is hard.'"

Calvin outlined the wedding and the implications in marriage were important to better the young man and woman (Continued On Page Four)

Water Conservation Association Will Hold Membership Drive

Belief that organization of an under ground water conservation district would forestall growing demands for state control was expressed by a group of irrigation farmers at a meeting of the Lamb County Water Conservation Association Friday in the courthouse.

The group thought it likely that legislation to regulate both drilling and pumping of irrigation wells through a state agency would be offered to the next legislature if a district is not formed.

At the present time, it is not known what area any given district would cover. The Under ground Law provides that boundaries of districts may be designated (Continued On Back Page) contemplating marriage understand the meaning of the ceremony and build their home by the principles laid down in it.

Mrs. B. H. Rucker, Hockley county council chairman, was voted district vice president in the afternoon session by a vote of 26-19. Mrs. Rucker was nominated by the delegation from Hockley county. Opposing Mrs. Rucker was Mrs. John Redwyne, Lubbock county council chairman, who was nominated by her delegation.

Attendance at the meeting reached 300 which included 45 voting delegates, county agents and visitors. The only county not represented was Crosby.

Mrs. G. T. Maltby, district vice president, presided over the entire meeting and recognized two invitations, from Lubbock and Tulla, as sites for next year's district convention.

Miss Ella Caltee, THDA treasurer from Itasca, candidate for state president thanked the group for their support.

The Snyder Hoce Demonstration Club from Hale county asked for and received the district's endorsement of Mrs. B. M. Harris as candidate for state vice president. Election of state officers will be held at the state convention in the last week of August in Big Spring.

The group gave a rising vote of thanks to all the women who aided in the organization of the meeting and to the Lamb County Leader, County Wide News, Radio Station KYOW and the Lubbock Avalanche-Journal.

Dr. Armistead C. Of C. Officer

Doctor Bill Armistead gave some data concerning outdoor toilets in down town Littlefield. After discussion there was a motion by Mr. Kline that the sanitation committee and Dr. Armistead meet and try to work with the city to get these outhouses eliminated.

The group accepted Mr. Little's resignation with great regret. The group nominated and elected Dr. Armistead vice-president.

Lutheran Young People Present Moving Picture

A full house at the American Legion Hut last Sunday night was inspired as it beheld some of the possibilities of a youth center as portrayed in the movie, "Youth for the Kingdom." The picture, presented by Emmanuel Lutheran's young people, contrasted a desirable and an undesirable home. The answer to the question "what shall become of today's youth, tomorrow's leaders?" Lies definitely in the home, as the picture so convincingly brought out. Of course, the home can be aided in its vital tasks thru a youth center, provided such a youth program has a worthy goal and provided its leaders are as consecrated as they are capable. The picture was well received by all who were in attendance, which included some responsible officers of Littlefield's future youth center. A short and comedy rounded out the evening's program.

The next movie night is scheduled for May 28th. The picture which Emmanuel Lutheran's Walter League will present for the inspirational and information of all is entitled "The Story of the Life of Jesus Christ," famous pilgrimage play, produced in full color.

HOW IS YOUR POSTURE?

Good Posture has long been a thing to be admired—something to delight the eye. From ancient times to the present an erect bearing has been regarded among all races as a thing of beauty. Soldiers marching; a man sitting in the saddle; an athlete publicly displaying his physique; bathing beauties on parade—none of these would have grace and charm without good posture.

It has remained for chiropractic to discover that erect posture involves much more than something pleasing to look at. Now we know that it is a foundation of good health.
