TAXATION

Democrats look the other way if you mention the sales tax. They have refused to open their lips about President Hoover's recommendation.

At that time Roosevelt had a private plan. He wanted congress to pass a beer bill for revenue.

It has been impossible to work out that scheme. The budget gets worse every time you look at it.

As things stand now they may try to fix the sales tax through near the end of this session.

ECONOMIES

Mr. Hoover swiped much of the Roosevelt consolidation thunder in his message last week.

Carter Glass May Be Given Cabinet Post

Baker, John W. Davis, Dern Of Utah, Miss Perkins, Mentioned
By RAYMOND CLAPPER, United Press Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON (UP)—President elect Roosevelt may press for his "new deal" as applied to the banking world by appointing Senator Carter Glass of Virginia, a collaborator in the federal reserve act, as his secretary of treasury.

Names of likely cabinet choices were brought back to Washington over the week-end by close friends of Gov. Roosevelt who gathered here for the gridiron dinner. Many had conferred with the president-elect in Warm Springs, Ga., and Albany, N. Y.

While the door was left open in all cases, some reported Roosevelt was thinking favorably of an official family which in addition to Senator Glass would include, New York, D. Baker, Ohio, John W. Davis of New York, George Dern of Utah, Miss Frances Perkins and Jesse Isidor Straus of New York.

The capital was full of Democratic politicians, most of whom professed to have "sure thing" information.

Gov. Roosevelt is said to be especially anxious to have Senator Glass as his secretary of the treasury, some of these friends reported.

This preference was regarded as indicating a determination by Gov. Roosevelt to pursue his "new deal" regardless of powerful opposition from financial interests.

Senator Glass is champion of the Glass banking reform bill in this session. Important bankers are already discussing among themselves strategy to defeat the measure.

New Ground
With an issue thus taking shape between Wall Street and the explosive collaborator of the federal reserve act, the information that Roosevelt wants Glass as his secretary of treasury pointed, in the opinion of some, to a readiness to break new ground in dealing with economics and banking.

Christmas Story Retold

Mrs. W. D. McDonald Tells Biblical Story Of Christmas And Its Practical Application

Mrs. W. D. McDonald and Mrs. Joe Faucett of the First Methodist Church recently conducted a Christmas service at the jail for the prisoners.

Christmas cards were distributed to the prisoners. Mrs. Faucett sang "Silent Night," very beautifully. Mrs. McDonald gave the following talk on the mission of Christ.

One night, nearly 1832 years ago, a company of shepherds were watching their flocks by night on the plains of Bethlehem. It was during the still hours of the night and darkness mantled the world. Suddenly a bright light shone about the shepherds, a light above the brightness of the mid-day sun. How startled they must have been when they saw this light and heard angelic voices proclaiming, "Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace and good will toward men."

Their fears soon subsided. An angel appeared and told them that in Bethlehem there had that day been born "a Savior which is Christ the Lord" and that they might find him in a manger. Convinced of the truth of what they had heard by the miraculous manner in which the news was given, the shepherds hastened to Bethlehem, where they found Jesus as it had been declared.

Mission of Christ
What was the mission of this child Jesus? John tells us that "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life." And again that God sent His son into the world to condemn the world but that the world through him might be saved.

Look at the life of Jesus. How pure and holy! Follow his footsteps through the years of his ministry and pause at the foot of Calvary. See him as he takes up his cross and carries it until his strength fails and he falls beneath the burden. Behold the savior of mankind pained to the cross. How the people jeer and mock him. Yet he answers not a word but prays, "Father forgive them for they know not what they do."

'Twas done. The precious ransom paid, for our sins! While his death took him away from us spiritually, still he is with us personally. His influence and presence are manifested in a great many different ways.

Baylor Flag At Kai Mast Over Two Suspects

WACO (UP)—By order of President Pat M. Neff, the flag at Baylor University's campus was flown at half staff as a token of mourning for students "who so far forgot themselves as to haze defenseless freshmen."

Furthermore, the dignified new head of Baylor warned students, in a "riot act" read to them at the chapel hour, the next violation in the way of hazing will be laid before the McLennan county grand jury for criminal prosecution.

Neff denounced "any 200-pound upper classmen who band together to inflict corporal abuse on defenseless young students," and told the student body that freshmen recently hazed were so severely beaten they were unable to assume any pose other than a standing one in comfort for several days.

Several days ago two star Baylor athletes were suspended indefinitely for hazing. The president's office said the flag was at half staff because of their lapse. These athletes were Harold (Red) Clem, Dallas, guard, and Bennie Clark, Fort Worth, tackle of the 1932 football squad.

Man Arrested For Stealing Million Hangs Self In Cell

NEW YORK (UP)—Walter Clyde Davis, 50, until last June a wealthy and influential Colorado banker, committed suicide in his cell at police headquarters while awaiting extradition of charges of embezzling $1,000,000.

He was charged with taking the money from the Colorado Springs Building & Loan Association of which he was president. He had been arrested by detectives who had seen his picture in a detective story magazine.

A turnkey making his rounds saw Davis' head showing above a strip of metal between the two doors into his cell. He thought he was standing on the door frame.

"Don't ride that door," he commanded.

Davis didn't answer. The turnkey then saw he was hanging from a noose he had made from his necktie and suspended from a higher bar.

The body was cut down and after three hours of effort to bring him back to life with a pulmonator, the man was pronounced dead.

Davis left no note. He had been living in a Gramercy park apartment under his own name. He took his arrest calmly.

"I'm glad it happened," he said, if it had to be. I was thinking about giving myself up, anyway."

Davis talked flibly of returning home and making restitution. Police did not suspect he considered suicide, hence they did not watch him any closer than they did other prisoners.

The body was taken to the morgue. It was thought relatives would return it to Colorado for burial. Davis' wife and daughter live in Colorado Springs. His daughter is a lawyer there.

Beware of Colds NOW!

With Flu in the Air Colds Are Doubly Dangerous

Colds—always treacherous—are doubly dangerous now, with flu reported in many sections. They lower body strength and pave the way for flu and all its serious complications. Heed even the slightest sniffle as a danger signal. It is no time to take chances.

The safest course to follow is that outlined in Vicks Plan for better Control-of-Colds. In clinical tests last winter, Vicks Plan reduced the number and spread of colds by half!—cut their dangers and costs more than half! Full details of the plan are in each Vicks package. Briefly, it is this:

- TO PREVENT MANY COLDS: At that first feeling of stuffiness or nasal irritation, sniffle or sneeze—Nature's usual warning that a cold is coming on—use Vicks Nose & Throat Drops, the new aid in preventing colds. Vicks Drops aid Nature in throwing off the infection that threatens. They prevent development of many colds.
- TO END A COLD SOONER: If a cold has developed or strikes without warning, vigorous measures are necessary. At bedtime, apply Vicks VapoRub. Its direct double action—continuing through the night—brings quicker relief. During the day, use the convenient Vicks Nose Drops every few hours as needed. They add to comfort—help shorten the cold.

Follow Vicks Plan for Better CONTROL of Colds

Gems of Peril

CHAPTER XXV

Old Mr. Jupiter stared at his son, mixed emotions on his face. "Well! I snapped. So you're back, eh. I thought you'd come to your senses. You can't live on love even in Paris, I understand." He chuckled harshly. There was a hint of eagerness in his voice which he tried to hide.

Mary shook her head involuntarily—it was so much a moment of fact and Jupiter was employing so little of it.

But Bruce paid no attention to his father. Tossing the black wide-brimmed "parson hat" he affected on a table, he sat down on the arm of a chair, and pulled out a cigar—starting rudely at Mary meanwhile.

Mary marveled at the change in him. The dreamy brown eyes that had rested so warmly upon the throaty-voiced siren last night were black with anger. The luxuriant dark hair was more awry than before; it stood up in an indignant ruff above the high, bronzed forehead as if five agitated fingers had been run through it. The lean, sensitive fingers that toyed with the cigar trembled visibly. But Bruce's voice was remarkably untroubled—soft, smooth and poisonous.

"Oh, yes, I've come to my senses," he murmured, his gaze slipping over into the girl's. Mary flushed and retreated involuntarily before his brazen stare. "It is just as you said, father, I have stayed away too long, things have taken a surprising turn during my absence. Such a turn as a sensible man might have foreseen. But I am not a sensible man, I am an artist."

He paused and blew a cloud of smoke almost in the girl's face. "I am very naive, am I not?" he asked purringly. "I actually surprised me to learn that my place here had been usurped by a greater artist than myself." He gave another Mary a deep, sweeping bow.

Utterly mystified, Mary turned to Mr. Jupiter, who was looking at his son as if he were a madman.

The hopeful, timidly welcoming light had died out of his eyes. His jaw suddenly tensed.

"Will you say what you mean?" he shouted angrily.

Bruce did not raise his voice nor remove his eyes from the girl's now terrified eyes.

"You don't understand, my dear father? Of course not. Naturally, with your honest tradesman's soul, you would be the last to recognize the grist in the young lady who stands beside you—a beautiful artist, a charming artist, but nevertheless an adept in the gentle art of gold-digging."

Old Mr. Jupiter fell back in his chair, openmouthed.

"Well, of all the damn fools!" he gasped weakly. When Bruce would have spoken, he shouted "Shut up! Get out!"

"Nonsense, my dear father, Bruce returned calmly. "I have come home to stay."

Jupiter made a threatening movement.

"I'm sorry to have been the cause of—of—she fumbled to express her humiliation, but she did make waves away her apology.

"It'll be all right, hell, come around," he told her. "We got plenty to do if we get away Tuesday. Get me, Hendricks on the wire will you, Mary?"

He was off on his plans for the cruise. The man and his wife were

But I come home and am met with the boat. Why? Titian curls about an angelic face have done the damage. I fear. Well, I am not without some charm myself, if I wish to apply it to the scold task of opening purse-strings in my favor. I have not been a good son, perhaps, but at least I am a Jupiter. There's my challenge, Miss Harkness—do you take it up?"

Mary laughed outright. "You're quite mad," she said. "The Alps must have done it—the altitude. Now I'll make you a challenge. Suppose you get a little better acquainted with both your father and me before you do anything ridiculous."

Bruce had expected anything but amusement.

"Is my decision to remain in my own home ridiculous?" he demanded.

"It can be if you're going to stalk about like Edwin Booth," she chided gently. Then she turned to the inarticulate old man. "Why don't you invite him on the Gypsy? A little change of things might change his ideas and save me more of this kind of thing. To Bruce she added, "Your father had quite enough trouble. Even you must see that."

"Quite," Bruce returned, "and I'll be glad to see you go. You can turn your elbow whenever you turn, Miss Harkness. You are an object of great interest to me and I may as well confess that from now on I do not intend to let you out of my sight."

Mary smiled. "The Gypsy is small," she answered, and turned to leave the room.

Mr. Jupiter had been simmering now he spluttered into speech. "Mary, come back here!" he shouted. "Don't you get ahead of yourself, young man! Leave this room until you're asked into it!"

Mary and I have some business to tend to. If you go along on the Gypsy, you'll button up your lip, or I'll put you ashore, remember that! I ain't too old to paddle you yet, if I have to take the back out of you!"

Bruce regarded the tip of his cigar intently. "Business?" he asked, with an insinuating rising inflection.

"Business," the old man snapped. And unrolled what to Mary was an unexpected vein of sarcasm. "Business that wouldn't interest you. Mary thinks she's drawn a bead on the man that murdered your mamma. You've got no time for such foolishness. You might miss your exhibit. You better get along about your paint-pots."

Bruce hurriedly scribbled then paled. That snarl had hit home. Mary was glad to see that he could be hurt on that score; there must be hope for him. For the first time she softened toward him slightly.

"I'm scarcely an expert," Bruce said, "but perhaps I can be of use." He walked to the door and turned. "My old room, father."

Jupiter nodded scowling. Mary felt suddenly weak as they were left alone.

"I'm sorry to have been the cause of—of—she fumbled to express her humiliation, but she did make waves away her apology.

"It'll be all right, hell, come around," he told her. "We got plenty to do if we get away Tuesday. Get me, Hendricks on the wire will you, Mary?"

He was off on his plans for the cruise. The man and his wife were about to embark on unappreciated everything else in his mind, for which Mary was grateful. For the first time she began really to hope that the business might be brought to a successful end, and soon.

Leaving Jupiter crackling orders over the telephone, she went thoughtfully out and up to her room. It was useless to try to reach Dirk—she did not want to be curious about his whereabouts. She would write him at the house and wait for his answer, hard as the waiting would be. If she did not hear on Monday she would call him for she couldn't go away without seeing him.

Dearest Dirk, (she wrote): I am sorry I walked away as I did last night—I don't suppose you'd like to forgive me, would you? I should never have mixed you up in all this. It just comes under the head of 'unfamiliar business' that must be attended to before I can marry you, that's all. You remember you worked late at the office last night finishing up some matters that couldn't be left undone. It's the same with me.

"Don't worry about it, and above all don't think you must help. I don't expect you to, and I'm not angry about it, really."

I am leaving Monday for Florida on the Gypsy (with the Jupiters). Can't you come and see me before I go, though, I make you this promise—that whether this job is finished or not, I will keep my date with you in December. (Or have I gone?)

With love, always,
MASS

When she had an letter sealed, stamped and ready to go she had the absurd impulse to run to Dirk with it in her hand. How could she wait until Monday for an answer? If I don't see you again before I go, though, I make you this promise—that whether this job is finished or not, I will keep my date with you in December. (Or have I gone?)

Excited by the prospect of getting out into the crisp autumn air, and by her errand, she went out whistling happily. Outside her door she came face to face with

Bruce, who had evidently moved into the room across the hall. He said stiffly, "We are neighbors, it seems, I'm sorry if the proximity annoys you."

Mary seized the opportunity to talk to him outside his father's hearing. It was a chance she had hoped for, but would have found it disastrous to seek. "Let me understand you," she said, coming forward to look him straight in the eye. "If I accept your father's offer to make me his heir, it means that you will remain here, with me? That you will not go back to Europe?"

"How bright you are!" "And if I refuse, is you will go on about your affairs as before?" Bruce was obviously taken aback if I thought you meant it—yes," he returned hesitantly.

"Then I accept."

"Accept?" Bruce struggled with his lips. "I accept, and I expect you to live up to your bargain. If the only consideration that will induce you to change your wholly selfish way of living and spend some time with your father is fear of me, then I am glad to be of use. It's too late now to do anything about it so far as your mother is concerned, but there's still your father who would like to see something of you, didn't you say?"

Bruce was staring at her, a strange expression on his face. "I've just of said that you are six years my senior, and I am twenty-six years old, and I am a successful, naturally, but I don't want to see you all grown to be very fond of cars and her."

"I quite understand that, little fellow!" Bruce murmured softly, a peculiar glow in his eyes.

Mary had dropped her bitter tone and tried to speak sincerely as she felt. Now she knew herself up and returned smiling.

"Regard me as a rival if you wish."

Nothing in her eyes, she had been thinking how much she missed you, how long how little their money had bought them, after all. I'll be successful, naturally, but I don't want to see you all grown to be very fond of cars and her."

Regard me as anything you please. I don't want your money. But if you let that brunet Garbo take you away from your father again, I'll take it! That's my threat, and I'm glad to be able to enforce it."

"Ah-ah!" Bruce cried. "Remember you now! I've been puzzling over where I'd seen you. You were the girl in the elevator at the hotel last night—with the man who held the whiskey bottle, and Louis spoke of it at the time." He laughed delightedly. "Prohibition has its amusing aspects to a 'European'!" then he added, "Does my father know about last night? It was a devious, of course."

Mary turned on her heel and left him. She did not want to be alone in an open quarrel with him. They would have to live in very close quarters on the Gypsy and she would send the small craft to hold them both as it was.

She urged the surly Betty to a brisk step going in to town, having dropped her letter, she felt better. Both she and her mount were content to take the long hill and home—a seller's and buyer's cool ride and the bright autumn sun had her again.

As they passed the Tabor house, Betty's head had just quickened for a second glance at the white-shirted light, who leapt to greet her. "Carmela!" she said, and with a lightning racket. Her art drained itself of blood as she recognized Dirk.

BEER There is more to these beer hearings than you may think. The large lager boys on the house committee have about decided 3.2 per cent would not intoxicate anyone. They probably will move the percentage up that far when they report the bill to the house shortly. Mr. Hoover has privately informed at least one republican leader he could not sign such a measure. Its passage therefore is stage play. It can hardly be put through over a veto. Beer will come, but probably not before Mr. Hoover goes.

DEFICIT What the deficit is no one knows. The budget so heavily costs with sugar you cannot see the big pill is. Doc Mills fixed up the most confusing "if, and, but, however" figures ever emitted by the treasury department. Expert statisticians have tackled it. They come out with estimates ranging from $1,300,000,000 up to nearly two billions.

For instance Mills counted war debt payments this year and next. These are doubtful, especially for next year. He also figured congress would effect around $550,000,000 in economies for 1933. You cannot even guess how much they will be. The Hoover idea on government salaries and veterans' expenses are certain to be sent out for alterations.

The greatest secretary of the treasury since Andrew W. Mellon was off only a billion dollars in his estimates of last May. That is about 25 per cent. He was off about five hundred million in what he thought the tax bill would raise. He missed estimating expenditures by a similar amount. Some people think such poor marksmanship is a crime. He will be charged in congress with having misrepresented the affairs of the government. He will be pointed out that corporation directors are put where dogs can't bite them, when their judgment gets that had in making statements to their banks.

As a matter of fact Mills was only guessing then and is only guessing now. Government receipts are based largely on business. He misgauged business the last six months. He may be just as far wrong on the next seven months. If so, his budget figures are hardly worth reading. The safest thing seems to be to note that we are faced with a deficit which may amount to two billions and that we should be pleased if it turns out any lower. That is necessary to show tax revision is necessary.

DEBTS The main private purpose behind our debt correspondence was to disrupt harmony among our debtors. We treated England with clear favoritism. We were a little rougher with France. Her case is not as good as England's. From that standpoint our diplomats think the correspondence was a huge success. What we privately looked for all along was that they would form a gang against us. That was Mr. Hoover's personal fear. They may not now.

Our highest officials thought Poland sent the best debt note of the lot. Her argument that she would have to default on some private loans if compelled to pay the government loan was persuasive to those who do our note writing. It would hardly be to our taxpayers.

NOTES If you noticed, there were two budgets, the regular one and a supplement. That was because Mr. Hoover was irritated at the regular budget upon his return from Palo Alto and ordered the cabinet to do some real cutting. The present lineup indicates beer may be here by April Fool's Day. That might be an appropriate time. Senator Copeland's two day speech against the Philippine Independence Bill was a lonesome affair. At one time there was not another senator present in the chamber outside the presiding officer's chair.

STOCK EXCHANGE You will probably see some surprising changes among stock exchange firms at the year's end. The tendency to create small new firms which cut down on the overhead by leasing desk space from their bigger brothers is on the increase. Hopes for an early restoration of volume of trading have pretty well gone by the board. Some of the larger houses are thinking of declaring a splitup on themselves.

There is reason to believe that Curtis Dall—Roosevelt's son-in-law—will leave the house in which he is at present a payner and participate in the formation of a new firm. Special financial arrangements to test end are in negotiation. One important house has defied general sentiment by moving into larger quarters where it will be equipped to handle a half million shares a day. Now all it has to do is to find the half million. One of the biggest firms has applied to Exchange authorities for permission to pay its customers' commissions instead of salaries in an effort to reduce overhead. Direct commission payments are barred on the ground that they are not in the customers' interest. In piping times there were numerous ways of getting around this commission ruling with bonuses and such. It is an entirely different matter as an economy measure. The Exchange is not apt to change the rule at this would give additional ammunition to critics on the outside.

MARKET There has been skillful handling of stock prices by market big shots in the last few weeks. The idea has been to liquidate and get out of situations which now look unpropitious—but everything has been handled in retail quantities to prevent any suspicion of panic. Lack of public interest has been a serious handicap but occasionally it is possible to pick up a little change by squeezing shorts.

GOLD Nearly every gold mining stock in the market except Homestake has been played with lately by manipulators. They haven't got anywhere because the public simply refuses to bite.

Although the next action on U. S. Steel's preferred dividend will not be taken until January it is a dull day that doesn't bring forth a flock of rumors and counter-rumors. It is too early to pick which way the cat will jump but a leading trust company has been implying probable negative action to its important clients.

AVIATION The latest found in the battle between E. L. Cord and the old management of Aviation Corporation was full of action behind the scenes. Many meetings were held at in the morning and no director knew from one day to the next when he might be called on either to resign or take the presidency. The appointment of Richard F. Hoyt as a neutral president has calmed the troubled waters temporarily but insiders expect a renewal of hostilities before long with Cord the aggressor.

RAILS The teamwork between railway officials and representatives of the security owners at hearings before the Coolidge committee isn't so hot. Recently two officers of the Security Owners' Association testified the same day. The second to be called was set to shoot the works in favor of speedy consolidation but the first—a high banking official—was so lukewarm about it that the next man up shifted his prepared plan in a hurry. The committee will pay considerable attention to the relative figures for operating revenue and funded debt. In 1919 revenues were $1.4 billion dollars and total debts 11.34 billions. Now revenues have shrunk to 4.24 and debts have climbed to 14.24 billions. Milton Harrison's remarks about airplane competition will pave the way for a drive on airmail subsidies at the present session of congress.

GOVERNOR

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 1) try's highest tribunal, was absent from the capital. Lon A. Smith, member of the Texas railroad commission, which is the statutory regulator of oil and gas conservation statutes, applauded the court's decision as "a just one." He was the only member of the commission in the city. Governor Sterling did not indicate when he would withdraw the state troops from the East Texas field. However, there were only 46 officers and men on duty there at this time, the original force of 1,200, which moved in when martial law was declared for the area a year ago last August, having been steadily decreased as personnel of the railroad commission was able to enforce the commission orders without help of the bayonet. Alford Also Silent James V. Alford, attorney general, would not comment on outcome of the case, but it was known around the capitol he always believed the governor did not have the power to invoke martial law to enforce orders of the civil authority. The attorney general's department did not actively participate in defense of the governor's right to supervise the field with the military. Governor Sterling's term will expire on January 17 next, and it had been assumed he would lift martial law before turning the reins of government over to his successor, Mrs. Miriam A. Ferguson.

The mandate of the supreme court will not issue until the 15-day period for filing motions for rehearing has expired.

COURT'S RULING WASHINGTON—The supreme court set aside orders issued by Governor R. S. Sterling of Texas to officers of the state militia for reducing oil production in the East Texas fields and then ruled that the railroad commission had lost its appeal from a federal court decision which held invalid the commission's order restricting production in the same area.

In the first case, the court sustained a three-judge federal court which had prohibited enforcement of the gubernatorial orders, the opinion criticizing Governor Sterling for declaring it necessary to call out troops because a state of riot and insurrection made restoration of order imperative. Only in Emergency The opinion by Chief Justice

Hughes said it recognized a governor's power to use the discretion the emergency might require but declared that all such executive actions were subject to judicial review which must decide whether state executives had overstepped their recognized authority. The court decided that in this case there was no military necessity for interfering with operations of the East Texas oil wells. Proceedings originally were instigated by E. Constantin and other operators in Rock county, Texas, who challenged validity of the state law and orders of the commission fixing the amount of oil they could produce. Amendments directed the attack against Sterling and Texas national guard officers. In the second decision, the supreme court, finding that the commission's order was based on an act of legislature, since amended, declared that the controversy no longer presented a live issue. Suit Ordered Dismissed It, therefore, directed the trial court to dismiss the suit, brought originally by Alfred MacMillan and other East Texas producers. Referring to the martial law case and Sterling's contention that the courts were powerless to intervene to prevent his calling out the troops, Chief Justice Hughes said: "If this extreme position could be deemed well taken, it is manifest that the fiat of a state governor, and not the constitution of the United States, would be supreme law of the land."

He said findings of the federal court in Texas in the Sterling case.

"They leave no room," he said, "for a suggestion that, in a matter of this magnitude, there is any point of view, could be taken to justify the action of the governor in attempting to limit complainant's oil production, otherwise lawful."

Auditor Says Economy Must Be Practiced

Present And Prospective Condition Of Treasury Is Reviewed

AUSTIN (AP)—Drastic economies, coupled probably with increased taxes, will be necessary during the next three years to place the state general revenue fund on a cash basis, Moore Lynn, state auditor, stated in a report to Governor Sterling on the present and prospective condition of the treasury.

"A situation is presented wherein it is necessary to cut expenses sharply during the ensuing three years, to increase revenues, or to do both," Lynn's report said.

Economies already have been effected and further economies are planned, but these are not adequate in the face of declining revenues. The case calls for the best thought and co-operative effort of those responsible for remedying conditions.

"Half way measures will not suffice. The situation can be remedied only by bold measures and businesslike action on the part of administrative officials and the legislature."

Deficit Forecast

The report stated the deficit as of August 31, 1932, the end of the last fiscal year, at $3,174,608, and estimated the deficit at the end of the present fiscal year, which also is the end of the current biennium, at $2,854,171, this figure not making allowance for the cost of the regular session of the Forty-third legislature, deficiency warrants now outstanding or accumulated interest on the public debt.

Lynn estimated that the amount of money available for the general revenue fund for the 1934-35 biennium, which will start next September 1, would be $37,304,321, as compared to the $43,250,180 expended or to be expended during the present biennium. The net decline in revenue being estimated at $5,945,858.

In figuring the revenues for the 1934-35 biennium, Lynn took into consideration the, homestead exemption amendment adopted at the general election. This alone would decrease amounts coming into the general revenue fund by $3,000,000 annually.

Homestead Amendment

If the homestead amendment is interpreted as relieving homesteads of $3,000 value and under of the 35-cent state school tax and the 1-cent confederate pension tax, the annual loss for the school fund would be $3,000,000 and would be $600,000 to the Confederate pension fund, or a total decline in revenue of these funds for the biennium of $7,200,000.

In that case the school and pension funds will have to do without this $7,200,000 in revenue, new sources of taxation for these funds will have to be found, or the burden will have to be assumed by the general revenue or some other fund," Lynn declared.

"Should the general revenue fund be called upon to bear the loss to the available school and pension fund, together with the apparent shrinkage of $5,945,858 in the general revenue fund, it would mean that the funds available for the 1934-35 biennium would be only $30,104,31, or a reduction of $13,145,858 as compared to the present biennium.

There would be a reduction of 30 per cent in the funds available for the support and maintenance of departments and institutions."

Legislative Committee

During the first year of the next biennium, Lynn, estimated the funds available for specific appropriation other than expenses of the legislature and other fixed charges would be $16,574,992 and for the second year would be $16,574,992.

"The legislative committee on organization and economy will present to the legislature a practical plan for effecting real economies without detriment to public service," Lynn reported.

"The committee's program should be studied carefully by those who are charged with the responsibility of balancing the state budget.

Concentration of Tax Administration in one department, and a more exacting enforcement of tax laws can be made to increase revenues materially.

"The legislative tax survey committee has made a very comprehensive study of the tax problem, and should be called on for information relative to new sources of revenue, if it is found necessary to adopt that expedient."

Frequent Forecasts Urged

With the legislature and the budget officials in the dark it is not surprising that the general revenue fund was subject to ever recurring deficits," he commented, recommending that forecasts of the expected financial status should be made at frequent intervals, consideration being given to changes in conditions and prospects as they become apparent.

Lynn stated his estimates could not be accepted as final and inflexible, since they were based on present conditions and available information and the status of the fund would vary with changes in conditions.

Too Much Is Too Much

WASHINGTON, Dec. 8.—Governor Roosevelt has been forced to cut short his stay at Warm Springs, interrupt his consideration of national affairs, and plunge himself into the intricate financial and administrative difficulties of New York City. The Herald Tribune's correspondent, Mr. Ernest Lindley, writing from the Roosevelt train, says that Mr. Roosevelt's intimate associates have felt for some time that he would like to wind up his career in Albany by lending a hand to the reorganization of the New York City government. "It is impossible. No human mind can deal effectively with the complex of national and international problems for which Mr. Roosevelt must shape policies, and at the same time be Governor of New York State and reformer and savior of New York City."

It is now plain to all that Mr. Roosevelt as President-elect must not only assume the ultimate command of the Democrats in the present Congress but must prepare himself for a special session shortly after his inauguration. Barely three months remain before he must assume the administrative burden of the Presidency. In these three months he has an opportunity for study, reflection, and considered planning such as he will never have again. It would be a thousand pities if he wasted any part of this time by letting himself be diverted, distracted, and wearied by a multiplicity of affairs. If he tries to do everything he is called upon to do, he will do nothing well. No one could. No man alive can at one and the same time make responsible decisions for the nation, for its largest state, and for its largest city.

Fortunately, Mr. Roosevelt can reduce his burden. He can resign the Governorship of New York and turn the office over to Lieutenant Governor Lehman, who is also the Governor-elect. This will give Mr. Lehman the power which should go with the responsibility which will shortly be his anyway, and it will relieve Mr. Roosevelt of a responsibility which he need not and should not attempt to carry.

Any one who will come to Washington and make inquiries among Congressmen in order to learn the popular sentiment they reflect, will quickly conclude, I think that the critical period of the new administration will be at the very beginning. The new Congress will be largely composed of novices. It will mean well toward the President. But it will lack clear ideas and coherent purposes. Unless Mr. Roosevelt crystallizes his opinions promptly about a definite program, unless he provides it from the very outset with a working philosophy and with the cohesive influence of an issue fund was subject to ever recurring deficits," he commented, recommending that forecasts of the expected financial status should be made at frequent intervals, consideration being given to changes in conditions and prospects as they become apparent.

Lynn stated his estimates could not be accepted as final and inflexible, since they were based on present conditions and available information and the status of the fund would vary with changes in conditions.

TOMORROW

... and its new ways

What discoveries are around the corner—what things, undreamed of today, will be commonplace tomorrow? The past has seen products once rare and unknown become widespread and familiar. The future will see the process repeated.

Advertising is the driving force which brings about these changes in your life. For when a new product is developed, its distribution is limited until the advertiser tells you about it. When the product is known, you and all your neighbors form a great potential market, permitting quantity production. Economies in manufacture result—and the article comes within the reach of everybody. It has happened before—and it will happen again in the same way.

Read the advertisements! They are of vital importance to you. Your homes and habits are changed by advertised goods. What things novel, interesting, modern—will be offered next? You will find new horizons in the advertising pages of this newspaper.
