Lamb County registered 97 young men in the nation's second registration day Tuesday, according to Mrs. Dorothy Cobb, Clerk.

Further commenting on the registration results, Mrs. Cobb stated that the Board expected to register a larger number of young men Tuesday, but that those from Lamb County attending summer school, on vacations, working in the harvest, or away from Lamb County for any reason whatever would register wherever they happened to be, and that they expected to receive a number of registration cards for men so registered, which might add considerably to the above number.

Announcement Saturday of the extension of the Federal Housing administration program for three more years, was received with much satisfaction in Lamb County and throughout the South Plains.

Celebrating Our Independence

This year the Fourth of July should mean a lot more to most of us than just an opportunity to go swimming, to go on picnics or to shoot off fire-crackers.

Faced with increasing threats to our independence, in recent months we have probably heard more and thought more about the virtues of life in America than at any other time since 1917. We who for so many years have taken our independence, for granted have suddenly become vitally aware of it as a way of life which is worth any sacrifice to protect.

The Fourth of July has been the most important holiday in this country for 165 years—when our countrymen declared us to be free of all ties to England and stated our belief as follows:

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed."

All of the complicated systems of government we have devised since that time has been tested by law, in the light of its adherence to the platform as set forth in our Declaration of Independence. All of our relations with foreign governments have been studied from that same viewpoint, and anything which has threatened the continuance of our independence has been repulsed.

In our hectic discussion about politics and social programs, we often lose sight of the crystal-clear aims of our form of government as set forth in the Declaration of Independence and in our Constitution.

All of us have been taught about these documents in school, but few of us have read them since. On this Fourth of July would be a good time for everyone of us to get out a history book, or even the world's Almanac, and read once again these famous documents. When we celebrate the signing of the Declaration of Independence this year, let's be sure we know what it is we are celebrating.

RAILROAD MEDIATION

Most of us have worried about the interference with defense production caused by strikes. No figures are available to show just how many more, ships, tanks' planes and guns might have been built if it hadn't been for strikes, but we know the number is considerable.

But one thing we haven't had to worry about is the efficient movements of raw materials and of finished products to their proper destination in this country. The railroads have done a notable job of handling a rapid increase in hauling goods without any disruptions.

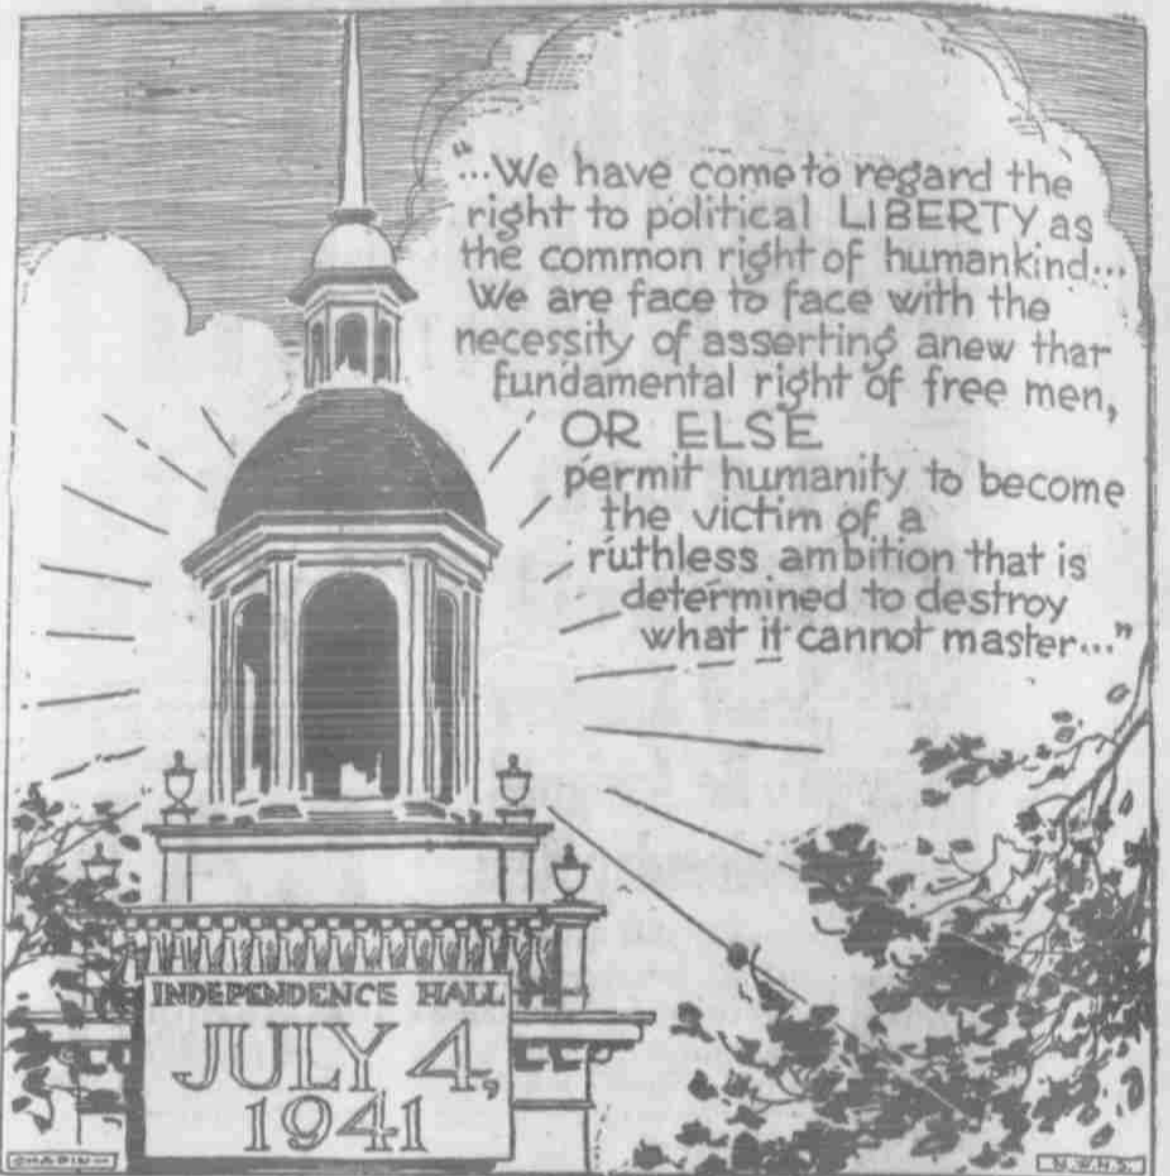

Furthermore, we have felt secure in the belief that there would be no interruption in railroad service due to labor difficulties. We know that railroads have an employee-employer mediation plan by which any difficulties which have arisen have been settled without disruption of service.

But there is trouble brewing in the railroad industry right now. Because of increased handling of freight the railroad employees envision big profits for the railroads and are impatient to "get theirs". In fact, they have asked for wage increases which, it is estimated, would cost the railroads 900 million additional dollars a year, which, the railroads say, is $700,000,000 more than their total net income last year.

In spite of increased railroad activity, railroad statisticians figure that if they complied with union requests they would be worse off than at any time during the depression. And their present wage charts show that the railroad employees are now earning more than they ever did in the railroad's most prosperous years.

It is hoped that both sides will put their cards on the table and settle the problem in a fair and business-like manner. The railroad unions, made up of a fine group of Americans, should use their present differences as an opportunity to show other branches of industry how labor and management can sit down at a table together and come to an agreement — without strikes, without picketing and without slowing up one iota the part which they are playing in defense of their jobs, their homes and their country.

Farmers To have Great Part In National Defense

Agriculture's part in the national defense program was the dominant thought at the national AAA conference held in Washington recently. Texas delegates to the meeting pointed out on their return, according to W. E. Bentley, chairman of the Lamb County AAA Committee.

In developing recommendations for the 1942 National Farm Program the delegates considered carefully the important part the farm program must play in the defense program by encouraging greater conservation of the soil, giving great assistance to the small farmer, and encouraging production of ample supplies of the foods needed both in this country and in other countries, the state AAA office has reported to the local committee.

The committee chairman declared that the conference gave a practical demonstration of the unity of agriculture in its determination to do its full share in the defense of the nation.

The conference, which was attended by farmer state committee-and AAA officials from every state in the nation, adopted a number of resolutions relating to defense, including a recommendation that farmers avoid speculative expansion and reduce debts, and build up reserves of cash and farm commodities during the present period of industrial activity. As measures to prevent inflation, the conference urged higher taxes on excess profits, incomes, and luxury items and more intense efforts to sell defense bonds and stamps. It also urged that, due to shortage of farm labor in some areas, priority be given to production of farm machinery and parts, and that a balance be maintained between farm and industrial prices.

The national conference proposed a change in the method of computing farm payments, which would eliminate the payment made on general crops such as oats, barley, and rye, and would make funds formerly used for this purpose available for carrying out additional soil conservation work. Farmers would still receive acreage allotments on such surplus crops as wheat, cotton, and tobacco and earn payments for planting within their allotments of these crops, the AAA committeeman was informed.

Strengthening of the Ever-Normal Granary and marketing quota provisions of the national farm program also were recommended, and new soil-building practices were proposed, including a special practice by which low-income families may receive seeds, plants, and fertilizer for use in increasing home food production. The cost of the materials would be deducted from the payments earned by such families. Under the practice low-income families also could earn additional payments for live-at-home practices.

The recommendations of the national conference were taken from suggestions made by farmers from all over the country through their community and county committees. All recommendations are subject to the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture.

AUSTIN, TEX., July 1 (UP)—Drunken drivers in Texas are due for rough times at the hands of Texas prosecutors if the district attorneys were earnest in their protests when Gov. W. Lee O'Daniel vetoed the new drunken driving bill.

At behest of prosecutors who wired that the old law was enforced with difficulty by the legislatures overruled the governor's objections and put into effect penalties that the prosecutors asked.

These penalties are:
For first offense—imprisonment in county jail not less than 10 days nor more than two years; or—fine not less than $50 nor more than $500; or—both fine and imprisonment within the limits given.

For second or subsequent offense—imprisonment in the state penitentiary for not less than one year nor more than five years.

The penalties are incurred for operating a motor vehicle upon any public road, highway, street or alley while "intoxicated or under influence of intoxicating liquor."

The old law added "within any degree." Governor O'Daniel said omission of that phrase weakened the law.

Though absent Graves was able to record his vote on most matters. This was done by "paring" with some senator on the other side. A "pair" has the effect of cancelling a vote each way.

Baptist Friendship Class Enjoys Patriotic Program

An interesting patriotic discussion was held Friday afternoon at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Hutson on east seventh street, when Mrs. Hutson was hostess to members of the Friendship Class of the First Baptist Church at their regular monthly luncheon.

The luncheon was enjoyed at four-square tables, which were centered with a small testament and flags. The service table was centered with a Bible, and at each end of the book were bowls of white daisies, with the flag hoisted above the flowers. Plate favors were tiny flags.

Mrs. L. W. Jordan, teacher of the class, led the discussion, and the group told stories of the flag, Betty Ross the Star-Spangled Banner, and America. They also discussed the rules of the flag.

Those attending this delightful affair were:

Mesdames Carl Smith, Walraven, Cal Harvey, Ewing Thaxton, Perkins, Virgie Mae Brannen, McGee, G. C. Vaught, J. A. Price, Jordan and the hostess, Mrs. Hutson.

CHURCH OF THE NAZARENE

Phelps and Ninth Sts.

Miss Margaret Jackson

Mrs. Beulah Farmer. (Ministers)

We invite you to our services, and if you are a believer in the old fashioned John Wesley doctrine you will enjoy the type of messages that are given at this time.

A series of sermons on Sanctification are now being preached each Sunday morning, such topics as—

"Why I Believe in Sanctification"

"The Crisis of Sanctification"

"Entire Sanctification"

"Perfection, What it is, How obtained"

"Utmost Salvation"

We are having regular services now that our building is near completion, and we welcome you to the "Little Church with a Big Welcome".

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH

Roy Shahan, Pastor

The ordinance of Baptism and the Lord's Supper will be observed at the evening service Sunday. The pastor will bring a message on the subject, "The Gospel For The Eye".

The main truths in the life of Jesus are brought out in these solemn and beautiful Ordinances. Your presence in all of the services of the Church is an indication of your interest in the Spiritual things of life. Your presence helps the service. We will do our best to help you.

METHODIST CHURCH

Jim H. Sharp, Pastor

We appreciate the use of the Presbyterian Church during the time that we were where we could not use our church building.

We are going to have our services at our Church next Sunday and we hope that every member will try to be present at all the services. The building will not be as ready as we would like for it to be but we can have our services there. So be sure and come to the services next Sunday at the Methodist church.

AMHERST METHODIST CHURCH

The tree that stands alone usually develops symmetrically but it is not always true with men.

Too much attention to the signs distract our attention from the road.

No pillow is soft enough to ease a guilty conscience.

The district Superintendent was here last Sunday and held the Third Quarterly conference. We had several engagements to meet that day and made this meeting as brief as he could. Due to this meeting which had been rained out and others scheduled some of the Methodist people were not able to attend the funeral at the Baptist Church.

Next Sunday we are having our National services. The uncertain weather and other work of the church delayed us to next Sunday. Come be with us and take part with us.

The pageant last Sunday night was well attended and all the actors did honor to themselves, the church, and the cause of our benevolent work. We hope for others in the year. This was good preaching in a different way and by the lady.

The services for the week are the same. Come to yours and lend a hand.

May Choose Address For Registration Says Director

A selective Service registrant who, on the registration day of July 1, had more than one place of residence were allowed to choose the one which he desired recorded on his registration card as his place of residence, General J. Watt Page, State Selective Service Director has announced.

On the first registration day, October 16, 1940, such registrants were often confused as to which place to list, General Page pointed out. This was especially true in instances where men had legal residences in one community but had a temporary dwelling place in another. As the residence listed on the registration card determines what local board has permanent jurisdiction over the registrant, some of the men later wished to change the address they had given, but were denied the privilege because Selective Service Regulations prohibit such changes.

In the second registration on July 1, General Page said, the registration cards contained a space for the registrant to list his place of residence. In the event that he had more than one place, he was allowed to list his choice as his residence without interference or dictation from a registrar, General Page added.

In addition, the registration card had a space for recording a mail address. This may be the same as the place of residence or it may be another address where the registrant would receive his mail more readily.

CHAPTER VI

SYNOPSIS
On board the Orizaba, beautiful Camilla Dean meets Ronald Barker, half American, mysteriously involved in espionage in Palestine. After they have parted their eternal friendship, Ronald tells Camilla that Joseph Assad, a fellow passenger and one of Camilla's admirers, is in reality Hassan Icar, son of a rich sheik of Damascus, instrumental in the removal of Osman Khali from the throne of Omar in Jerusalem, and asks her to find out where Osman is hiding. Camilla proceeds to cultivate Assad in the hope of obtaining this information. Late one afternoon she is attacked by a Turkist member of the crew named Ayub, but escapes with slight cuts. Camilla and Assad dine in the captain's cabin. He tells her he will "disappear" when they reach Alexandria.

The figure of a native startled her by appearing among the rocks beside her—

"Do you have to disappear?" Camilla asked, "just now, when you and I—"

"I have to go. I have no choice." He made no direct answer, but went on in a moment coolly, "and I suppose you want me to go on reaching Assad?"

"No, not now after his proposal."

"I'm sure he has behaved very well with me."

"I think you couldn't count on him if you went off with him on a caravan into the desert."

"Really, Ronnie, are you trying to make the idea attractive?"

"No, I abominate it. If you care for me you won't take the risk."

"And if you care for me you'll stick around and make the thing impossible."

"Please be reasonable. I know I have no right to ask anything of you."

"Not unless you give me the right to ask you to stay."

"I can't stay."

She rubbed out her cigarette in a receiver, and said quietly, "So it is good-by."

He glanced at her once, quizzically, then took her in his arms. "You're a cruel little devil," he said, "but devastatingly sweet."

She kissed him as he wished. "You're a dear," she said, "and I'll never care for anybody else unless—and then she put a sting in the tail of her speech—"unless you stay away from me so long that I get used to you."

It seemed strange to Camilla for a pilot in a turbans and what seemed like an old-fashioned frock coat to clamber up the side of a ship. It also seemed strange to her that Kitty Trimble should be leaving her attractions so suddenly before Mahmoud Daoud, whose father had been a nephew of the Khedive. Perhaps, since Assad had deserted her, she wanted to show Camilla that there were other fish in the sea.

Camilla and Slim stood watching the rather soiled groups of porters on the dock below who waited to unload the Orizaba.

Camilla and Slim said their farewells to Michael Gay, who was to remain aboard the ship and see his wife safely landed at Beirut, and made their way down the gangway to the dock.

In the train the tour director showed Camilla and Josie in the compartment with Assad, Kitty Trimble, Mahmoud and Slim McManus, a very lively party where the budding flirtations of the Orizaba had a chance to flower in a different atmosphere. At tea time Assad, who was now in his element, ordered Turkish coffee almost as heavy as Turkish and almost as sweet.

"It was Assad's intention, apparently, to make himself indispensable to Camilla, and she accepted his attentions, trying to forget the conditions his hospitality might impose. They dined well on special dishes Assad's choosing and then the following morning Mustapha Ail, the best dragoon in Cairo, took them all out to see the relics of the Mamluks at the museum and showed them through the bazaars.

They at night out to the Pyramids in a night of a string of taxis. In the vehicle Assad's heavy eyes looked at Camilla with an almost proprietary interest and she permitted him to hold her hand. He was devoted to her than ever and she lost none of her confidence in his ability to keep him under control.

"What were your relations with Ronald Barker?" Joseph Assad asked Camilla as they left the procession of loaded camels and donkeys in the city proper and rolled along the avenue of palms and villas toward their destination. "Had you met him or heard of him before he came aboard the Orizaba?"

"Never. He was just a pleasant acquaintance," she said cheerfully and then added, "a short acquaintance in our friendship, yours and mine, Joe."

"He must have been very grateful to you for helping to save his life."

"He said he was," and then she thought it about time to end the conversation. "Do you know anything about that shooting, Joe?" she asked. "Who did it and why?"

"I know nothing about it."

It was, of course, what she had expected him to say.

She was getting nowhere and she knew it. She must choose, like Assad, the oriental way of saying little and listening much.

They climbed the hill to Cheops and, after the usual expressions of awe and rapture, went down the rocky road to the Sphinx, which would be posing for them by the time they reached it, with the moon at just the exact angle to show the monstrous effigy at its worst and at its best.

Mustapha Ail, with the air of mystery that made his job expensive, advised them all to keep together under the protection of his men; for frequently, he said, inquisitive tourists wandered off into the sand and were seen no more.

"Hokey," Slim said, spitting in the general direction of the Pyramid of Cheops.

Nevertheless, the desert called to Camilla, and she could understand its lure—"Allah's Garden," they called it, where peace was as only peace on earth could be found.

The voices of her companions impinged on ears that she had assumed to silence and she wandered off, eluding Assad, who was occupied with Josie, ending her way beyond the shadow of the nearest tombs and out upon a mound of rocks where she could face the desert and all her unquiet spirit with solitude.

The figure of a native startled her by appearing among the rocks beside her. His kaffiyeh was pulled down over his eyes, meeting the scarf wrapped around his neck, from which emerged a familiar voice. "Haven't you wandered too far, Camilla?"

She gave a quick glance around at her friends who had gone toward the Sphinx. Apparently her absence had not been noticed. "Oh, Ronnie," she said joyfully. "I thought I'd never see you again."

He laughed as he took her in his arms and she saw that his face was stained and dirty and that only his voice was familiar. "The jinn in the bottle," he said. "You wanted me and so I came."

"I did. Where do you come from? Where have you been?"

"Camel driving. Don't I look it? But I had to see you before I went to Jerusalem. I'm flying tomorrow. I've had some news today. Ayub has confessed."

"Is Assad implicated?"

He nodded slowly. "I came to tell you that. Has he behaved himself?"

"The soul of discretion."

Sounds of voices calling her name from the path below. "You must go now. I'll manage to see you in Jerusalem."

Again the sound of voices. "Good-by," Ronnie said, and disappeared.

"Coming," Camilla cried, waving her hand and moving over the rocks toward the Sphinx, Assad climbing the rocks to meet her.

"Don't you realize that's a very dangerous thing to do?" he grumbled.

"No," she said cheerfully. "I've been communing with kismet."

Ronnie had flown to Jerusalem and Assad had gone to the Kasr-ed-Doubara to attend to "important business." Josie and Janet had gone shopping and Camilla intended to improve her time on a mission that she had planned since yesterday. A conversation with Mustapha Ail conducted in reportorial fashion by Camilla had given her an idea about Mahmoud, the grandnephew of the Khedive who, in his commercial pursuits, she found, used many aliases in looking for stock.

She found Slim wandering in the lobby, ordered a taxi and told the driver to go to the antique shop of Mahmoud Daoud just off the Mouski. Slim did not know where he was going or why.

But the Mouski was apparently just around the corner and Mahmoud's unpretentious place. Camilla was met at once by a suave young man in perfectly fitting morning coat, spats and a Parisian manner. She asked for Mahmoud but the young man who proclaimed himself a cousin of the proprietor reported that Mahmoud, having just returned from America, was very busily engaged at the moment with a lady in his private office at the rear of the shop and could not be seen immediately.

So Camilla and Slim browsed around to see if there was anything she wanted.

Slim was incorrigible, and at once put two old Persian armlets in his pocket without the slightest idea of paying for them. Meanwhile others entered the shop and Camilla succeeded in getting Slim to give up his plunder.

As they approached the rear of the store and examined some old Persian luster ware, the voice of Kitty Trimble came clearly from an open door.

"In a Geographic Magazine on the ship, Mahmoud. When I went back to look for it, the magazine had disappeared."

And then a low murmur of Mahmoud's voice, indistinguishable as Camilla moved away just in time to see Slim put a small amber box into his pocket. She was so absorbed in what she had heard that she almost neglected to rescue the box, at last deciding to put Slim on a teakwood bench and hold his hand, which was the only way to keep it from taking things.

"Camilla, there's the loveliest scarab on this table right at my elbow."

"Oh, Slim. Do you know that Kitty Trimble is in there with Mahmoud?" she whispered.

"Do tell," Slim said. "More dirty doings . . . What do you suppose . . ."

"I can't tell you. But I've found out what I came here for. I've got to buy something and go."

Camilla found Mahmoud's cousin, and buying a small slave bracelet went out of the shop. Slim slowly trailing. "I didn't know you liked slave bracelets," he said when the taxi was on its way to the hotel. "Here's one for your other arm, Camilla," he added proudly.

"Slim! It has turquoise set in it."

"Yes, and small diamonds. It's prettier than the one you bought."

"Slim, we've got to go back tonight and make some excuse."

"What excuse have you got to make? I snatched 'em, didn't I?"

He was hopeless. What could be done with such a man? She could return them anonymously, of course . . . and this she decided to do.

Camilla wondered about Assad's important business at the Kasr-ed-Doubara. Nothing for Ronnie's good. She felt singularly helpless and must have shown her anxiety to Slim who ordered two old-fashioned when they reached the hotel.

"Camilla," he said, "you know I love you. I can't bear to see you bothered. Is it because I snatched those things?"

"It's something I can't tell you now. Something to do with Kitty Trimble."

"Oh!" He was willing to let the matter rest there so she thanked him and went up to her room.

She had hoped to have a message from Ronald Barker before he left and was forced to be content with a brief laconic note: "King David Hotel, Jerusalem, Wednesday, Ronnie."

It was difficult to know what was going to happen and Camilla realized that she must at the earliest moment let Ronnie know of her discovery. She wanted to warn him. But how? A telegram to the British High Commissioner at Jerusalem? But what could she say that would not be revealed to all the world? And secrecy in Ronnie's affairs, she realized, was more desirable than anything else.

WPA Project Employment To Be Reduced

LUBBOCK, June 27.—WPA project employment will be reduced from 2,666, to 1,765 workers in the 24 counties comprising the Lubbock WPA district, it was announced today by District Manager J. O. Jones.

The sharp curtailment in WPA employment is in line with national re-trenchment, State Work Projects Administrator, H. P. Drought, advised district managers, in announcing the statewide employment cut.

WPA employment is reduced nationally to 1,000,000 workers and in Texas from 73,310 to 56,500 workers. WPA certificates national defense projects will be continued at full strength, necessitating greater reduction on other types of WPA projects, Jones was advised.

Because the reduced WPA employment makes it impossible to employ workers in localities where projects are scattered and the cost of supervision is relatively high, work will be concentrated in areas where the relief load is heaviest, district managers were advised. It may be necessary to discontinue WPA activities, at least temporarily in certain counties in order to reduce supervisory costs, Drought told district managers.

VOLUME XIX LITTLEFIELD, LAMB COUNTY, TEXAS, THURSDAY, JULY 3, 1941 NUMBER 14

"ONE NIGHT IN LISBON" TO BE SHOWN AT RITZ THIS WEEK END

"One Night in Lisbon", a romantic comedy for the adult customers, faster, funnier and freer in employment of double meaning than most others in ready and it profits by direction of the utmost proficiency, in surprising degree, by its treatment in time and circumstance at the core of the old tale of a man's with a maid, honorable in this situation, but with virtually unprecedented insistence upon immediacy will be featured at the Ritz Theatre Saturday midnight continuing through Sunday and Monday.

Edward H. Griffith, producer-director, has used wartime London and as setting for Fred McMurray's wooing and winning of Madeleine Carroll—an enterprize conducted under other conditions and elsewhere in "Cafe Society", "Honey-moon in Bali", and "Virginia".

McMurray plays an American engaged in flying bombers to Spain and Miss Carroll an English girl of the upper class whom he meets in an air raid shelter and lays siege to forthwith. John Loder plays the formal British suitor who opposes the American suit, and Bill Burke the acquaintance of all rooting for the American because she used to be one, who affords a story point on the side of propriety. The girl, serving her country as chauffeur for a statesman, obtains plane passage for Lisbon to spend a night with the American before he catches the Clipper for home but is given a letter to deliver which, unknown to her, is being used to decoy German spies. The statesman, the English suitor, the American's divorced wife and the spies all show up at Lisbon, making her bedroom something of a general cross roads, to her discomfiture and the American's, but it all ends up as it should.

It is first as a comedy, second as a romance, and in no case as a war or propaganda picture, that the production stacks up. As a comedy it depends upon dialogue and situation, now alternately, now collectively, with the provoking of laughs its prime function.

Colorful Film "Blood And Sand" comes To Palace Sat. Mid-night

With the blazing pageantry of Spain providing the colorful background for Tyrone Power's most powerful role, 20th Century-Fox's latest Technicolor hit, "Blood and Sand" has been called a "magnificent, tensely exciting film". This latest picture produced by Darryl F. Zanuck features Linda Darnell and

4-H Club Visits White House

Four-H club delegates from 43 states and Alaska attending the 15th annual National 4-H club camp in Washington are shown as they toured the White House and grounds. Responsibilities of rural youth was the theme of the convention, which marked the high point of the organization's yearly activities.

Rita Hayworth who head the famous name cast coming to the Palace Theatre Saturday Midnight, continuing through Sunday and Monday.

To faithfully capture the rich colors of the Spanish costumes, architecture and atmosphere, Director Rouben Manouliant took his Technicolor camera crew and a troupe of 300 to Mexico City, where old Spain still survives in the new world. Amid gem-encrusted costumes and the Latin atmosphere, the dramatic narrative of "Blood and Sand" took form. "Blood and Sand" is the gripping story of a fearless death-defying matador, teasingly romantic, who is torn between the love of his beautiful wife and the fatal charm of an alluring temptress. With Tyrone Power, Linda Darnell and Rita Hayworth in the key roles, the enthralling story unfolds in a colorful panorama that stuns, excites and grips.
