As Reported by Stormie Meriwether,

Third Grade Student Dear Friends, Finally I had my

Birthday Party! First we went to the Barn (Cross Country Barn) for pizza. Kylie (Hill) came to help. Then we went to my house for a Sleepover! That is my very first big Sleepover! Counting me, we had thirteen girls at my house. It was great! First we put on all my dressup clothes and had a fashion show. Reese and Rhaelee were the judges. We walked down the stairs like princesses, ballerinas and even a pirate! I have lots of "dress-ups"! We all won "First Prize". We sang Karaoke, ate, told stories and had a wonderful time. In the morning, I was so happy Kylie came back to my house. We painted and made our scrapbook (Continued Page 6)

Focus On Beef Cattle: Nitrates In Hay

Forage sorghums could be high in nitrates. Ranchers that have bailed and stored or shipped in potentially high nitrate forages such as forage sorghums, hay grazer, or hay with johnsongrass, need to be aware of the increased possibility of nitrate toxicity. Especially if the cows are fed this hay for the first time after a severe winter storm. Cattle can adapt to a limited amount of nitrate intake over time. However, cattlemen often feed the higher quality forage sorghum type hays during a stressful, cold, wet winter storm. Cows may be especially hungry, because they have not gone out in the pasture grazing during the storm. They may be stressed and slightly weakened by the cold, wet conditions. This combination of events makes them even more vulnerable to nitrate toxicity. The same situation happens when producers are short of grass in the pasture and the only source of forage is a constant source of hay. The rancher is correct in trying to make available higher quality forage during severe winter weather

Black Friday

We just recently went through another "black Friday." Personally, I've never gone shopping on one of these days. Even though there may be some great bargains, I'm not tough enough to compete with the crowd. It just doesn't seem logical, for me to go camp out on the sidewalk on Thanksgiving night, after stuffing myself all day. Besides, any decent campout has to have a campfire, and I doubt that the store would let you have one next to their front door. Even if you survived the night on the sidewalk, there's still the most dangerous event of all, yet to come. It's called "opening time!" Last year there was a man trampled to death. I think he was the one who had the job of opening the door. It strikes me, the cowboys on the trail drives to Dodge City, might have "chickened out," rather than get mixed up in a "shopping frenzy." After all, they only had to contend with a stampede or two, hostile Indians, river crossings and maybe, the Sheriff, when they got to Dodge. You might wind up with the opinion that I'm just a grumpy old man, who doesn't like to go shopping, and you'd probably be
