THURSDAY, JULY 18, 1935

WILSON'S VIEWS CORRECT

The United States senate passed the Public Utility act of 1935, better known as the Wheeler-Rayburn bill. Under the terms of the bill, practically every electric holding company in the nation would be forced out of business by 1940.

The bill then went to the house, where the Interstate Commerce com mittee reported it out, after due deliberation, with this vital difference: Where the senate bill provided a "death sentence" for holding companies, the house committee recommended stringent regulation instead.

On July 1, the house, by the heavy majority of 216 to 146, defeated a proposal to put the "death sentence" back into the bill, in spite of the fact that steam roller political pressure had been used in an effort to force it into line with the senate. On July 2, by the still heavier majority of 257 to 147, it passed the regulatory bill recommended by the house committee. Now the bill must be reconsidered by committees representing both house and senate, in an attempt to iron out differences of opinion.

The action of the house is in ac cord with the opinion of the bulk of economists of the nation, who believe that unqualified destruction of holding companies is unjustified, uneconomic and anti-social. It is like wise in accord with the beliefs of business men of all kinds, who realize that if the federal govern ment can use its power to destroy one industry by fiat, it can do the same thing to other industries. Also it is in accord with the opinions of more than a million ordinary citi zens, utility investors and non-utility investors alike, who have writter their elected representatives in pro test against the bill in the form that was approved by the senate. And last but not least, it is in accord with eminent opinion that the bill in its destructive form was unconstitution al. It is difficult to see how any sincere citizen can dispute the wisdon of the house bill. It offers the limit of protection to both investors and consumers. It is designed to safeguard so far as that can be done by law, the millions of dollars that our panies-most of which would be en tirely destroyed if the senate bill were to become law. It keeps government in its proper place in relation to business-as an arbiter rath er than a dictator, entrusted with protecting the rights of both producers and consumers. It represents. in brief, sound legislation, in accord with our constitutional American

News reports now say that strong political pressure will again be brought against representatives by the minority "death sentence bloc" in an effort to force them to vote for the senate bill. That pressure should be resented, and the wisdom of the following statement made before the American Bar association, in 1910, by Woodrow Wilson, remem-

"Corporations do not do wrong. Individuals do wrong. You cannot punish corporations. Fines fall upon the wrong persons; more heavily upon the innocent than the guilty * * * upon the stockholders and the customers rather than upon the men who direct the business. If you dissolve the offending corporations, you throw great undertakings out of gear. You merely drive what you are seeking to check into other forms * * * to the infinite loss of thousands of entirely innocent persons and to the great inconvenience of society as a whole. Law can never accomplish its objects in that way. It can never bring peace or command respect by such futilities.'

But the country press is coming to the rescue. Next to the United States constitution, it is the greatest safeguard of the rights and liberties of the people. If You Must Drink

To the married man who cannot get along without his drinks, the following suggestion is submitted:

Start a saloon in your own house. Be the only customer. You will have no license to pay. Go to your wife and give her $8.00 to buy a gallon of whiskey. Remember, there are 69 drinks in one gallon. Buy your drinks from no one except your wife. By the time the first gallon is gone she will have $10.00 to put in the bank and $8.00 to start business on again.

Should you live 10 years and continue to buy boots from her, and die with snakes in your boots, she would have money to bury you decently, educate your children, buy a decent house and lot, marry a decent man and quit thinking about you.

In this direct manner Frank Brown, county clerk of Travis county in the early days, describes the Green and Ray Byars and Cecil staunch settlers of Texas in his an-Waters of Briscoe, motored Sunday nals of Travis county, one of the numerous collections of family archives in the University of Texas library.

"The way through the wilderness could at times be only formed by means of blazed trees." Frank Brown wrote. "No good wagon road was known in the country. At times, parties travelling in company, or even single ones, would be compelled to halt and go to work repairing the trace to ensure progress. At crossing places or streams, the banks would have to be worked in order to get over at all. If creeks were up, they would often be compelled to camp for days at a time, in order to cross. It was always the rule when travelling, to cross a stream when reached, if practicable, before camping so as to be on the farther side when morning came. This was done to avoid freshets that might come during the night and thereby

"The old-time dwelling was a one or two room log cabin, according to the size of the family. More frequently the home consisted of but one room, with a loft above, reached Wednesday evening. The public is by a ladder. If there were two rooms, a gallery was usually between. Ordinarily these had only dirt floors. After awhile as opportunity offered, floors were laid with ices both morning and evening for puncheons, split round logs with the two weeks. Rev. H. C. Smith of round side down. Wooden doors were made with wood fastenings. The windows had no glass, and were closed with rough board shutters in stormy weather, held in place by wooden or leather hinges. The roof was made of clapboards about three feet long, usually split from the trunks of pin oak or post oak trees. The boards were laid with a lap of about two-thirds their length, so as to show about one foot.

"It was seldom that nails were at hand. In order to hold the boards in place a straight sapling, six or seven inches in diameter, was felled, the limbs cut off and the trunk laid across the lap of the boards so as to hold them in place by its weight. ust 11. Rev. Willard Hardcastle of They were called weight poles. At each end rafter a hole was bored, a wooden pin inserted, the logs laid on the boards, above and against the pins, and were thus held in place. Sometimes cross pieces were laid at intervals between the weight poles, to prevent them from slipping up or down, thus holding them in place. A roof prepared in the way mentioned shed rains effectually and lasted a long time. "Mud and stick chimneys were almost exclusively used. The hearth was built of smooth rocks, if accessible: if not convenient, it was laid clay, which became hard from the heat. An opening was cut in the end of the room, sticks were laid close together and the structure thus carried a foot or more above the roof. After this was done the sticks were thickly plastered on both sides with moist clay. This soon dried. Chimneys prepared in this manner answered the purpose very well.

"The emigrants usually brought with them one or more milk cows. the E. Miller, and Mr. and Mrs. Ida Cowart and Margery Vineor three years milk and butter and beef were plentiful. A pair of hogs and a few chickens were brought. If not, these were obtained as soon as possible, and added materially to the means of comfort and subsis-

"Many were the difficulties and neighbors and friends for the many tlement of the valley. From necessity, it became a custom for one or clearings. This was the only means of obtaining bread. And, at times, Floyd Pennington and son, W. E. the danger was so great, that while one went to a spring to drink, or after a bucket of water, another stood watch, rifle in hand, ready to shoot a prowling Indian, or one that whenever a few men were assembled held their guns in hand, with their backs turned, facing different directions, on the look out for an enemy. When an alarm was raised, the women and children were usually assembled at a central point for protection. If inconvenient, or too distant, they were assembled at the cabin, and the men stood guard.

"The presence of Indians in a neighborhood could nearly always be told by the conduct of the family horses. Their sense of smell was very keen, and the settler could tell by this means if Indians were near. They would indicate the proximity of the Indian by snorts and other symptoms of anxiety. If off grazing some distance, they would gallop towards the cabin, snorting and looking wild. There was a peculiar smell about the Indian, occasioned by his filthy habits and the free use of paints. Their faces were painted in various ways, presenting often a ludicrous and hideous appearance. They were wily and crafty, usually cruel and vengeful. But there are instances on record of great kindness and friendship exhibited by would return in kind, when opporsought and inflicted revenge when

Bread and Butter Pickles

25 large cucumbers. 12 onions (white medium)

1/2 cup salt

2 tsp. tumeric powder

1 pt. vinegar 2 cups sugar

2 tbsp mustard seed (white) 2 tsp ginger.

Let unpeeled cucumbers stand in water over night. Then slice cucumbers and onions and place in pan with the salt, (no water). Let stand one hour; rinse off salt, add vinegar, sugar, mustard seed, ginger and tumeric powder. Boil all ingredients until peel turns yellow (about 40 minutes). Pack pickles solid in sterilized jars and allow to stand 10 days before using.

Sliced Cucumber Relish (Sweet) 12 large cucumbers, sliced thin

11/2 quarts onions sliced thin 2 tsp. salt

21/4 tsp. tumeric 1 red pepper chopped fine, or

1/2 tsp. cayenne

1 quart vinegar

4 cups sugar. 1 tsp. grated nutmeg, 4 sticks innamon 1 inch long.

Sprinkle salt over unpeeled cucumbers and onions and let stand one hour. Drain well, place in kettle with sugar, vinegar, spices and bring all to boil, dissolving sugar well, and boil hard until slices glisten, usually about 30 minutes. Count from boiling point. Seal in sterilized jars.

Red Pepper Hash

12 green peppers

12 red peppers 8 medium sized onions

Make a brine using: 1 gallon boiling water, 1/2 cup

Pickling liquid:

½ pint pure apple vinegar, 1 cup water, 1 cup sugar, salt to taste.

Run peppers and onions through the food chopper and drain. Pour boiling brine over the mixture. Let stand for 10 minutes and drain. Add bot brine and let stand 10 minutes Wellington, are visiting her parents, and Mrs. Rance Hendrick. again and drain. Repeat this process Mr. and Mrs. Claud McMillin and ree times. This removes the excess coloring matter in the green peppers and leaves a better flavor for the whole mixture. When thoroughly drained, add the pickling liquid and cook the mixture until tender. Pack in sterilized jars while . . .

Beet Pickles

1 pt. apple cider vinegar

1 cup water 1/2 cup sugar

1 tablespoon cinnamon ½ tablespoon allspice (whole)

Beets 11/2 inches in diameter. Select carefully beets of medium size about 11/2 inches in diameter and cook until peel will slip off easily. Leave the root and at least 3 inches of the top on until beets are cooked tender. Bring to a boil the pure apple cider vinegar, water, sugar and spices which have been placed in a cheese cloth bog, and pour over the beets and boil 10 minutes. Pack beets solid in sterilized jars, pour boiling vinegar liquid over them and peel quickly.

Green Tomato Pickle

1 peck green tomatoes, sliced thin

4 onions, sliced thin 1 cup salt

1/2 oz. cloves

1/2 oz. allspice berries 1/2 oz. peppercorns

1/2 cup brown mustard seed 1 pound brown sugar

4 green peppers finely chopped Cider vinegar.

Sprinkle alternate layers of tomaoes and onions with salt, and let drain, and put in enameled lined Mrs. Charles May of Wheeler. preserving kettle, adding remaining ingredients, and enough vinegar to cover all. Heat gradually to boiling point and boil one half hour. Pour while hot into sterilized glass jars.

Relief Roll Clients Must Be Certified

Necessary Requirement to Show Eligibility for Work; Also Registration

Relief roll clients in order to receive benefits of work under the Works Progress administration must be certified as to eligibility for work and be registered with the U. S. Employment service, according to instructions received by Texas Relief commission officials from the Federal Emergency Relief administration in Washington this week. The social service department of the Texas Relief commission will handle certification of employables to the Works Progress administration.

The instructions pointed out that priority of workers within families shall be suggested by the social service department, based upon such considerations as health, disabilities, preservation of skills, and morale.

It was further provided that enrollment of a member of a family in the Civilian Conservation Corps shall not preclude the employment of another member of the same family on work projects financed in whole or in part under the Emergency Relief Appropriation act of 1935.

Certification of a client for eligibility to employment under the new program will not mean that the client will be dropped from the relief rolls, but as soon as the first paycheck for such employment is received, the case will be closed and relief stopped.

The same regulation will apply to non-resident relief cases, or transients, provided the transient has been registered with a transient center or camp for two weeks or more, and with the exception that no certification may be made for transients registering after July 15.

SIDELIGHTS

HON. MARVIN JONES

In my judgment, a program of oad building is the key to the future of our country. For a number of years I have been urging a complete and adequate road building program. This should include not only the through roads, but also the state, county and farm-tomarket roads. In act, I regard the latter fully as important as the through roads. Prosperity must begin at the grass oots. One might as well talk about a pipe line without gathering lines as to talk about main highways without feeder roads. They must all be a part of the same system.

Since the beginning of the new dministration, I have talked repeatedly with everyone, including the president, who has anything at all to do with the shaping of the program. The chief executive, in makng the allocation, has decided that definite percentage of the funds allotted for road building under the Public Works program shall be used for the secondary and farm-tomarket roads, and is having the program shaped to this end.

The people of our section are glad Commission has decided that in applying that part of the federal fund that has been set aside for the main ant Hill community. arteries, the gaps in the federal nighways in the Panhandle are to receive attention. But just as important, if not more so, is the other wing of the program. Everyone in our section should be interested in this phase of development.

I served four years on the roads committee of the house of representatives, and during that time urged a proper development of the farm-tonarket road system. I have been urging it from year to year since Lester Gast and two children, Mrs. that time. Naturally I am glad to Malcomb Levitt, Miss Grace Key, know of the prospects of construc-Grandpa Waters and Mrs. W. Jean's room had two windows, one of which was wide open. At this win-His keen gray eyes fixed her un- dow she knelt, peering out, and he dropped to one knee beside her.

"I first saw him from my bed," she whispered. He went behind that dwarfed spruce. For a while he stood there behind it-as if he was watching the house. Then he went on, walking as quietly as-as nothing human. As he went out of sight I got up and came to the window; and I watched him until I couldn't see him any more. He went toward the pump house, and out of sight,"

"I don't see any sign of him now." Jean siezed his arm, and he heard her breath in her teeth. "What's that? There, close in the shadow of the pump house?"

Kentucky looked hard where she pointed. As he stared, straining his eyes against the bad light, he presently began to believe that he could make out the crouching figure of a man.

For what seemed a long time they knelt there, their eyes fixed upon the shadow against the pump house. Once Kentucky was certain that he not only perceived the whole outline of the crouched figure, but had seen it move; and his hand moved toward his gun. But the shadow blurred and lost outline again, and he waited, unsure. *

When the telephone broke into abrupt outcry in the house behind them the sudden burst of sound struck across their tense nerves like the crack of a whip against fiddle strings. Jean jerked violently; then, pulling herself together, whispered, "D-n!" The telephone continued to

Kentucky whispered. "One of us will have to answer that. I think you'd better go. I'll stay and watch the shadow here. If it's for me, please take the message.

Jean Ragland hesitated, then silently obeyed. With his eyes riveted upon their mark, Kentucky listened for what seemed a long time to the low murmur of Jean's voice, two

Presently, alone, and with his eyes accustomed to their work, he saw the secret of the mysterious shadow dissolve, so that he finally recognized it for what it was-a bush, a wagon spring, and a broken buckboard wheel. Whomever Jean had seen' prowl the layout, and wherever he might be now, he was no longer in the shadow of the pump house and that shadow together.

He believed, as definitely as he had ever believed anything in his life, that she had put herself in his arms as a last resort-silencing his questions in this way when she could not longer otherwise evade him. But some grim factor within him humbly bowed his head, waiting for a different day.

Jean stirred at last, and freed herself lazily from his arms. She smiled at him faintly, her eyes dreamy, misty with sleepiness, "I'm dead for sleep," she told him; "I think I can sleep now-better than I have been, these nights."

He let her go, and when she was gone he smoked in a curiously mixed mood, half softened, half grimly ironic. Presently he went to Zack Sanders' bunk, and lying down without taking off his clothes was almost immediately asleep.

Not more than half an hour could have passed when he was jerked broad awake by a fluttering knock upon his door. Before he could answer it, the door opened half hurriedly, half in stealth, and Jean's whisper came to him through the dark. "Kentucky, are you there?"

"Here, Jean." He jerked a match out of his pocket and struck it into

"How many of them?"

"I only saw one. He was prowling through the shadows - I saw him plainly, not more than ten horse jumps away. He was carrying something on his shoulders. Then I thought I heard a walking horse. '

"Where did you see this?" "From the window of my room, I ouldn't stand it alone there any more. Sometimes I think I am going picked up his gun belt. "Be quiet," she cautioned him. Whoever it is doesn't want to be seen-that's certain. If we're going to find out who it is, he musn't know that he's been seen."

"O. K." She groped for his hand and led he way through the cold dark of the long ranch house. Jean's room had two windows, one of which was wide open. At this window she knelt, peering out, and he dropped to one knee beside her. "I first saw him from my bed," she whispered. He went behind that dwarfed spruce. For a while he stood there behind it-as if he was watching the house. Then he went on, walking as quietly as-as nothing human. As he went out of sight I got up and came to the window; and I watched him until I couldn't see him any more. He went toward the pump house, and out of sight." "I don't see any sign of him now." Jean siezed his arm, and he heard her breath in her teeth. "What's that? There, close in the shadow of the pump house?"

Kentucky looked hard where she pointed. As he stared, straining his eves against the bad light, he presently began to believe that he could make out the crouching figure of a man.

For what seemed a long time they knelt there, their eyes fixed upon the shadow against the pump house. Once Kentucky was certain that he not only perceived the whole outline of the crouched figure, but had seen it move; and his hand moved toward his gun. But the shadow blurred and lost outline again, and he waited, unsure. '

When the telephone broke into abrupt outcry in the house behind them the sudden burst of sound struck across their tense nerves like the crack of a whip against fiddle strings. Jean jerked violently; then, pulling herself together, whispered, 'D-n!" The telephone continued to Kentucky whispered. "One of us will have to answer that. I think you'd better go. I'll stay and watch the shadow here. If it's for me, please take the message.

Jean Ragland hesitated, then silently obeyed. With his eyes riveted upon their mark. Kentucky listened for what seemed a long time to the low murmur of Jean's voice, two

Presently, alone, and with his eyes accustomed to their work, he saw the secret of the mysterious shadow dissolve, so that he finally recognized it for what it was-a bush, a wagon spring, and a broken buckboard wheel. Whomever Jean had seen prowl the layout, and wherever he might be now, he was no longer in the shadow of the pump house and that shadow together.

Credit Associations Show Splendid Gains

Volume Doubled, Says Speaker at Amarillo Meet, Attended by Wheeler Man

Most of the production credit associations in Texas have more loans on their books at the half way mark in 1935 than were made during the entire year of 1934, and a number of the associations' have more than doubled their volume of business this year. This record of achievement was brought out in the address of Virgil P. Lee, vice president of the Production Credit Corporation of Houston, who was principal speaker at a meeting of representatives of production credit associations held in Amarillo, July 12.

J. A. Bryant, farmer living four miles southwest of Wheeler and member of the Canadian Valley Production Credit association, who at tended the Amarillo meeting, reports that representatives from five associations in this part of the state were present. The meeting, one of a at various points in Texas during the month of July, was for the pur pose of bringing to the secretary- BAPTIST-LADIES SOCIETY treasurers and the directors of the associations a better acquaintance with the purposes and efficient operation of the production credit system.

Production credit, which has been in operation in Texas almost two years, provides a permanent source of short-term credit on a co-operative basis to farmers and ranchmen. It is adapted to their needs; and more and more farmers and stockmen are becoming acquainted with its many attractive features, including a very low interest rate, which is five per cent at the present time.

Lee also discussed the four per manent units of the Farm Credit Administration of Houston and pointed out the benefits Texas agriculture has derived from the tremendous volume of credit that these institutions have extended to the farmers and stockmen of the state.

In addition to Bryant, the Canadian Valley Production Credit association, which serves Wheeler, Gray,

Roberts, Hemphill, Ochiltree and COUNTY EQUALIZATION BOARD IN SESSION HERE THIS WEEK

Oil and Gas First Up for Hearing -Expect to Close Sessions by Next Thursday

Sitting as a board of equalization the Wheeler county commissioner's court has been in session this week at the court house here. Adjustments of oil holdings valuations were first heard, followed by gas property values. It is reported by a member of the court that this is practically the only class of taxable property on which changes have been made. An effort to continue other real property values at the same level of last year has been made.

Work has been progressing nicely this week. Unless some unusual development should arise the sessions will close on Thursday of next week.
