Peagle's Mother Presents One Note Of Consolation

BY UNITED PRESS
 ARDEN CITY, Kas., Oct. 16.—A grey haired mother of the famous Peagle boys found consolation in the note of condolence she had been sent by the family—the last words of her youngest son, "Little Jake," been for her.

The body of "Little Jake" will be buried here tomorrow to be buried at that of his brother, Ralph Peagle, who was hanged at the State Penitentiary.

"Jake" died in a Springfield, Mo., hospital, yesterday of a wound received when he tried to fight his way through a crowd of police who surrounded him as he boarded a train at Arden City. A fight for several minutes was carried out by Peagle rather than face death.

Peagle had a confession, by the "Jake" that it was he who had shot a bank at Larned, Kas., and a jury last night to acquit him of the Peagle boys, Fred, James and Walter, who were hanged for the same crime. Peagle, who was the bandit and "Little Jake" looked at his acquittal did not, however, have any difficulties with the law.

County authorities held him on a tax evasion charge. Jacob Peagle, the father, was hanged today attempting to flee from the penitentiary. Fred's fourth son, Walter, is serving a term in the Finney jail for failing to pay taxes on money stolen from his brothers in their numerous raids and mail train thefts. Bank robbers which made them most feared and notorious outlaws in the west.

With one son recently hanged, another dead of gunshot wounds, and two others in jails, the life that has been said for years appeared darker than ever for Mrs. Peagle. She found solace in the news that "Little Jake's" last words had been, "I want to see my mother and I close my eyes."

Mrs. Peagle had not heard from "Jake" for two years, since at the time he and two of his brothers robbed the Lamar, Colo., train and killed four men. She thought him dead and refused to believe it was he who had been shot at Branson.

Reward Offered For Kidnapper Of Mrs. McKinley

GREENFIELD, Mo., Oct. 16.—Search for the swarthy abductor of Mrs. Alma McKinley shifted to Kansas City today as growing fears were felt that he may also have kidnapped Fred Benskin, Cedar county assessor.

Benskin was last seen leaving Jericho Springs for Greenfield late Tuesday night and his automobile was found hidden in a clump of trees near the spot where Mrs. McKinley, an expectant mother, was released after the kidnapper had held her prisoner for 16 hours.

Several posses which had been searching throughout this section of the state for the kidnapper abandoned the search late yesterday after Mrs. Benton Wilson, mother of Mrs. McKinley, identified pictures of a Kansas City gangster as the man who entered her farm home Monday night and forced Mrs. McKinley to leave with him, releasing her later after she promised to obtain $10,000 ransom money for him.

Mrs. McKinley was unable definitely to identify the man by the pictures, but the belief that he was the abductor was strengthened when a posse found a suitcase which the young woman said her kidnapper had carried.

Mrs. McKinley's father, Benton Wilson, whose Oklahoma oil lands made him wealthy, has offered $2,000 reward for capture of the kidnapper.

Nation's Views On Prohibition To Be Sought

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15.—The first effort ever made by the federal government to measure national opinion on prohibition was being undertaken today as President Hoover's crime commission, confronted with the task of rendering a prohibition report within 60 days was called back for resumption of deliberations.

Prohibition director Amos W. W. Woodcock, who has started an ambitious program of compiling "the facts about prohibition," distributed to the editors of 3,000 leading daily and weekly newspapers a questionnaire somewhat similar to the Literary Digest poll of private citizens. The response from the press, Woodcock said, would be compiled in pamphlet form. The law enforcement commission probably will be given an opportunity to study the results before making its report.

The questions asked of editors were:

One Battle May Decide Outcome Of Revolution

By JOE ALEX MORRIS
 United Press Staff Correspondent
 NEW YORK, Oct. 15.—The revolution and civil war in Brazil is 12 days old and one decisive battle on the northern frontier of the state of Parana may decide the outcome.

Federal troops at the frontier of Parana, which lies a southern state, have barred the advance of insurgent armies on the road to Sao Paulo and Rio De Janeiro, possession of which would mean the triumph of the revolution.

A "decisive" battle in Parana may or may not be fought, depending on the success of opposing troops in concentration movements but the army which gains complete control of the region will have an advantage that may be expected to prove decisive.

In less than two weeks, the Brazilian military activities have spread over an area about as large as the United States east of the Mississippi river, although somewhat different in shape.

The area directly involved in federal and rebel military action stretches from the northern coast southward along the eastern coast in the shape of a great inverted triangle, covering the richest regions of Brazil.

Within this vast triangle the revolutionaries control the great majority of states, but are divided and hampered in communications by the position of the federal strongholds in Sao Paulo, Rio De Janeiro, Espirito Santo and Bahia states, all of which are on the eastern coast and all of which join.

Briefly, the federal troops have halted the rebel advances from the north and central regions toward Rio De Janeiro and have concentrated strong forces on the border of Sao Paulo to protect the federal region from the powerful southern revolutionary armies. It is in this region that a "decisive" battle may be expected if one is to be fought and once the rebels are successful in clearing the road to Sao Paulo their advantage will be almost too great to be overcome.

If the strong federal forces on the Parana border can defeat the federal government will then be in a strong position to clean out other rebel states in rapid order.

BEWARE THE COUGH FROM COLDS THAT HANG ON

Coughs from colds may lead to serious trouble. You can stop them now with Creomulsion, an emulsified creosote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a medical discovery with two-fold action; it soothes and heals the inflamed membranes and inhibits germ growth.

Of all known drugs creosote is recognized by high medical authorities as one of the greatest healing agencies for coughs from colds and bronchial irritations. Creomulsion contains, in addition to creosote, other healing elements which soothe and heal the inflamed membranes and stop the irritation, while the creosote goes on to the stomach, is absorbed into the blood, attacks the seat of the trouble and checks the growth of the germs.

Creomulsion is guaranteed satisfactory in the treatment of coughs from colds, bronchitis and minor forms of bronchial irritations, and is excellent for building up the system after colds or flu. Money refunded if not relieved after taking according to directions. Ask your druggist. (adv.)

Buc's Have a Lot of Respect For Mavericks

BRECKENRIDGE, Tex., Oct. 16.—Coach P. E. Shotwell has not forgotten the hard battle Coach Joe Gibson's Eastland Mavericks gave the 1929 Buckaroos, when the Mavs held the district champions to a 12 to 9 victory.

With the stinging mud battle played last year still ringing in his ears, Coach Shotwell is driving his charges hard this week to get them in shape to make a stronger bid, if possible, against the Mavericks next Saturday.

Physically speaking, the Bucks are in as good shape right now as they have been since the first of the season. Not a single player so much as received a scratch in the Big Spring scrap. But while the Buckaroos are in perfect physical condition, they are far from being in their best playing form, as was demonstrated in the Mirreal Wells and Big Spring games.

Both of these contests indicated that Coach Shotwell does not have or has not found as strong a scoring backfield as he possessed last year. Neither has the Buckaroo forward wall showed the strength the 1929 line displayed. Coach Shotwell is making every effort to bring his club out of the kinks in time for the Eastland fray and others to follow.

Coach Shotwell's probable backfield starters will each weigh about 155 pounds with the exception of Stapp, who will likely weigh 160 pounds. Maxness is due to start at quarter; Stapp and Adams at halves and Hinrichs at full.

The seven starting linemen will average about 167 pounds per man. The linemen will likely be: Jones and Blackburn, ends; T. Spain and Clark, tackles; White and Martin, guards and Captain Griffin, center. Jones weighs 170; Blackburn 175; Clark, 185; T. Spain, 175; Martin 180; White 155; Griffin, 160.

Of this entire team, only two players were members of Coach Shotwell's 1929 regular championship team, Captain Griffin and Maxness, as regulars last year. Blackburn, T. Spain, Clark White and Stapp made reserve letters last season, while Martin, Jones, Hinrichs and Adams are playing their first year on the Buckaroo eleven.

Democrats Must Elect 19 Senators To Gain Control

By Morris De Haven Tracy
United Press Staff Correspondent
New York, Oct. 16.—The democratic party will go into the November 4 election with 81 seats in the house of representatives and five in the senate assured because the democratic candidates for that number of seats are unopposed.

To win control of the next congress the democrats must elect 157 additional members of the house and must name 19 senators in addition to the five who will take their seats without opposition.

The task before the republican party if it is to retain control of the next congress, consists of electing 195 members of the house in addition to 23 who have no opposition and 17 senators in addition to the one republican senator from Maine, already elected. If the republican can accomplish that they will have a majority in each house.

When set down in figures the task of the democrats with regard to the house of representatives seems the easier although it may not be. That is because a larger number of democrats are unopposed in the general election. Seven states—South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi, Arkansas and Arizona, have no opposition to complete democratic congressional tickets. In Texas 10 democrats are without opposition for the house while Virginia, Florida and Kentucky send three each; Tennessee seven and California one.

Only 23 republicans, on the other hand, take places in the house without opposition. California sends nine of the 23, Washington three, Wisconsin four and Massachusetts, Kentucky, Tennessee, Illinois, Minnesota, Michigan and Kansas one each.

There are 435 congressional seats to be filled. Four already have gone to the republicans in the state of Maine where the election was held a few weeks ago. One hundred four will be filled without opposition leaving 327 districts in which the major parties will contest for ascendancy in the house.

Library Given Book Impetus

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16.—The desire to make the Library of Congress one of the greatest Latin-American cultural centers in the world has given extraordinary impetus to its collecting activities.

The acquisition of Latin-American books has proceeded so rapidly that library officials are unable to estimate the number, amid a world-wide collection of 4,000,000 volumes, but 250,000 probably would not be an exaggerated estimate of the number about the southern republics.

The accelerated collecting of Latin-American material is due in part to the gift in 1927 by Archer M. Huntington of $100,000, from which the income is devoted to the purchase of books that relate to Spanish, Portuguese and South American arts, crafts, literature and history.

As this fund is applicable only to South American material the library has utilized other available funds to build up commensurate collections of works relating to Mexico, Cuba, Panama, Central American and other Caribbean countries.

The cultural value of the material is the primary criterion guiding the library's collectors. Key historical events concerning those countries heretofore have been abundantly available, but now an emphasis is being given to literature, art, archeology, and other material which reveals the extraordinary and unfortunately not too widely known—culture of Latin-American.

New Extinguishing System May Net Man A Fortune

ALBANY, N. Y., Oct. 16.—Antonio Valente, a West Albany grocer, worked for seven years on a fire extinguishing system and recently had it patented. Today he stands to win some $500,000 in royalties, according to a patent report he has received.

Valente's system, which he worked out in his spare time, is to install a network of pipes in every room of a home, or in every division of a building. A series of valves, operated from the outside, would be used to turn on water in any one part of the building or throughout it.

Builds Plane Like Paper Dart

This airplane, built like a child's paper dart, which the inventor, Roy B. Scroggs, of Eugene, Ore., claims will revolutionize aircraft design, is to take the air soon for its first test. The wingspread tapers from six feet in the front to 18 feet in the rear and affords, he says, improved lifting capacity. After working 10 years on the job, Scroggs has named his plane "The Last Laugh."

Parriott, a retired parachute jumper and former sheriff of Keya Paha County is so confident of his ability to protect a bank from bandits that he has offered to put up a cash deposit and guarantee that if any Norfolk bank employs him it will not be robbed within a year. He relies on his shotgun to save his guarantee.

Edison Says An Artificial Eye Is The Next Invention

MENLO PARK, N. J., Oct. 16.—Thomas A. Edison believes that an "artificial eye" will be developed by science that will be capable of penetrating the fogs that blind present day fliers.

Edison, while receiving his first ground school lesson in aeronautics from Assen Jordanoft, airplane designer recently, asked many questions about blind flying and fog.

"Thus far we have converted sound into light and light into sound. There is no reason for our not being able to solve the artificial eye," said Edison.

Heart Hungry

Laura Lou Brookman
Author of "Wash Romance"

BEGIN HERE TODAY
Adventure enters the life of Celia Mitchell, 17, when she learns the father she has supposed dead is alive and wealthy. She leaves her unpretentious home in Baltimore for a home in New York with her father, John Mitchell, and her aristocratic grandmother.

Margaret Rogers, her mother, divorced Mitchell and remarried and is now a widow. Barney Shields, young newspaper photographer, is in love with the girl and before leaving Baltimore Celia promised to be loyal to his love. She is lonely in her new home. Mitchell asks Evelyn Parsons, beautiful widow, to introduce the girl to young people. Mrs. Parsons considers Celia a means to win Mitchell's affections and agrees. She invites the girl to her Long Island home for a week-end and there Celia meets Tod Jordan, fascinating but of dubious character. Mrs. Parsons encourages the match. Celia treats Jordan coolly at first but is won by his romantic love making after he has rescued her from drowning. Lisi Duncan, socially prominent, becomes Celia's loyal friend. With Mrs. Parsons' assistance Mitchell arranges an elaborate party in honor of his daughter's 18th birthday. The party is a dinner dance. Jordan persuades Celia to leave early and when she arrives home at 2 a. m. her father is furious.

Two days later she goes shopping with her grandmother and is scolded for talking to a shop employe. Celia declares defiantly that her own mother works and working is no disgrace.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XXIX
Mrs. Thomas Worthington Mitchell froze into dizziness. If icy stares could have killed the girl beside her would have been a lifeless victim.

"Hold your tongue!" Mrs. Mitchell shouted.
Celia was angry. There were bright red circles in each of her cheeks. Resentment that had been slowly gathering now burst forth. "My mother sews for a living!" she exclaimed. "She's not ashamed of it, and neither am I. She's the finest person in all the world! You've no right to say things like that about people who work. They're—they're just as good as you are—they're better!"

She stopped, flushed, and looked at Mrs. Mitchell. It had been like touching a match to the fuse of a giant fire cracker. Realization of what she had done came over the girl gradually. Her face was white with excitement. Celia looked out the window of the car at the street. She could not trust herself to speak.

She was surprised that her grandmother did not say something. Pride kept her from turning her head.
They rode in silence until they reached Grammercy Park. Thompson halted the car and held back the door for them to descend. Celia darted a quick glance at Mrs. Mitchell. Frigid, informal, the white-haired woman stepped to the sidewalk. Not by the faintest sign did she recognize the girl's presence. Mrs. Mitchell moved majestically up the stairs and into the house.
Celia followed. She knew she had done a terrible thing but, stubbornly, was not ashamed. Apologize? Never!
Her grandmother was half-way up the staircase when the girl entered the hall. A minute later Celia had heard the door of Mrs. Mitchell's sitting room shut loudly. It was nearly 12 o'clock. Celia went to her own room and took off her hat. She tried to read, gave up the attempt, and finally went downstairs.

Martha was talking over the library telephone.
"Is this Dr. Griswold's office?" she asked.
"I'm speaking for Mrs. Mitchell. She wants the doctor to come as soon as possible. What's he can't? Oh, yes, he must come right away! Mrs. Mitchell is very sick. You say half an hour? Yes. Very well!"
Celia had been listening. Solmn-eyed, she stepped forward as Martha put down the telephone.
"Is grandmother ill?" she asked.
Martha nodded. "The doctor'll be here in half an hour," she said. "Mrs. Mitchell's had a chill. Excuse me, I must hurry back upstairs."

No Substitute For Your Sweetheart
You certainly don't want any. Neither do you want a substitute for Carter's Little Liver Pills as remedy for biliousness, torpid liver and constipation. Take Carter's, move nearly two pounds of bile, cleansing whole system. Accept no other. Buy at any drug store for 25c. Look for the red bottle. Resent substitute. Take Carter's.

"What's this nonsense? Why are you packing that traveling bag?"
"I'm going home. Back to my mother."
Mitchell turned and closed the door behind him carefully.
"So that's it," he said. "What's the matter? Don't you like it here? Tired of the place?"
Celia had expected to hear thundering wrath when she confronted her father. She had supposed it would be a good deal like their interview after she arrived home late from the party. This time she was prepared to surrender quickly.
"It's not that," she answered. "But I'm going. I telephoned about trains and there's one at seven o'clock."
"Determined to leave, are you?"
The girl was embarrassed. Was it possible he didn't understand? She tried to make it plainer.
"I can't stay here," she insisted. "Grandmother doesn't want me. Have you seen her? Martha wouldn't let me go in, but I thought probably you could. I hope she isn't very sick. It was my fault—I know I shouldn't have said what I did, only I couldn't help it."

Martha disappeared on noiseless feet. Celia sank into a chair waiting for what might happen next. Throughout the rest of the afternoon she was like a prisoner. Luncheon was announced and she went in to sit down to a dreary, solitary meal. She could not eat the food. After one or two half-hearted efforts she rose, leaving most of the dishes untouched.
There could be only one explanation of her grandmother's illness. What would John Mitchell say to this?
Dr. Griswold arrived. He was a short, rotund individual who came into the house briskly. Celia heard him conducting him up to Mrs. Mitchell's bedroom. The girl waited anxiously until footsteps sounded on the stairs. Then she went into the hall.
"Doctor?" she began uncertainly.
"Yes, I'm Dr. Griswold. What is it?" His voice had an energetic ring that matched his brisk walk.
"I'm Mrs. Mitchell's granddaughter," the girl explained. "Is she very ill?"
The doctor tipped his head to one side.
"Nervous relapse," he said shortly. "She's subject to them. Treated her for years. She'll have to have rest, absolute rest. I've left prescriptions and I'll be here again in the morning. Good day!"
Dr. Griswold's staw hat was clapped on his head and in another moment he was gone.
A little later Martha came down the stairs again and Celia accosted her.
"Martha," she asked timidly, "do you think I could see my grandmother for just a minute?"
"Oh, no, miss. No, I couldn't let you. The doctor said she was to be kept undisturbed! Nobody can go in to see her now!"
"But I thought—I mean I feel I ought to—"

"I couldn't let you go in, Miss Celia!"
The girl waited a while, then returned to her own room. She had no place in this house now. She felt like an interloper. For a long while Celia stared out the window. Suddenly she became alert, rose to her feet and set to work. She was still there when John Mitchell knocked on the door at five o'clock.
Celia hesitated, then opened the door.
"How do you do, father. Will you come in?"
"Why, Celia—what are you doing?"
She stood before him in the brown silk traveling costume Margaret Rogers had made. A brown felt hat was pulled down over the girl's head. She looked exactly as she had the day they arrived from Baltimore. Spread open on the bed was a half-filled traveling case.
"I had to wait to see you," the girl said slowly. "There isn't quite enough in my purse. I'm afraid I'll have to ask you to lend me five dollars. I'll send it back."

he did not look angry. Her courage rose slightly.
"I didn't mean to be rude," she began. "I said it before I thought, but, oh, don't you see I couldn't have anyone say such things about my mother! Mother's not common! I couldn't listen even to grandmother — and hear a thing like that!"
A dark glow spread slowly over the man's face.
"What was said about your mother?" he asked steadily.
Celia was talking excitedly now. She had to make this clear before she went away.
"We were at Charlotte's," she explained. "Grandmother was having her tea gown fitted, and the fitter dropped a ball of pins. I said 'let me get it,' and handed it back. After we got into the car to come home grandmother said I was never to speak to working people or treat them as equals. She said they were common! That was when I couldn't stand it any longer. Why—mother's a fitter! It just seemed as though grandmother was talking about her as different now. I'm sorry for what has happened. It's very hard for an old person to understand..."
The girl was amazed. Could it be possible that he was taking her side?
"I—I was willing to say I was sorry," Celia mumbled. "Martha wouldn't let me!"
"That was right," Mitchell agreed. "You couldn't mend matters. But, Celia, I know your grandmother didn't honestly mean to say anything to reflect on your mother. She didn't realize how it would sound to you."

His arm moved around the girl. In an instant Celia had hid her face against her father's shoulder. Hot, quick tears came.
They sat there until shadows began to darken the room. At last Mitchell said, "Put away these things now, Celia, and dress for dinner. We'll talk later."
The two dined at seven o'clock. Later Mitchell went to his mother's room. He returned to inform Celia that the "nervous attack" was not serious. Mrs. Mitchell was subject to such illnesses. He believed in a few days everything would be all right.
The household storm was not calmed so easily. After two days it was decided, on Dr. Griswold's advice, that Mrs. Mitchell should go to her country home in Connecticut. Celia would stay with Evelyn Parsons.
It was the widow's suggestion and solved a problem for Mitchell. The girl herself was pleased.
She was in the living room, idly turning the dials of the radio, on her first evening at Larchmont, when suddenly Celia became aware of another presence in the room.
She turned to confront Tod Jordan.
"Why—Tod!" she cried.
Evelyn Parsons watched them from the doorway. Her smile was sinister.

Indians Favor Pyote Cult

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16.—The pyote cult, strange and ancient religion, is making progress among the Indian tribes of the Middle West, despite a strong modernist-fundamentalist controversy which splits its membership. The religion, based on the curious effects of eating the pyote button, or dried top of a spineless cactus, is now the subject of an extensive study.
Dr. Maurice G. Smith, of the University of Oklahoma, who is making the investigation, has pointed out that while some of
