EARS AND EYES.

The anti-noise war spreads. The country, led by its two largest and noisiest cities, seems to have suddenly discovered this long-standing evil, and with crusading fervor moves to abolish it.

It is a holy war, likely to bring rewards in health, comfort and peace of mind to millions grown irritable and nervous without ever realizing quite what ailed them.

When this movement has spent itself, and made a calmer and saner nation, maybe the reformers can turn with equal fervor to another cause, needing no less attention.

Is sound more important than sight? Do ears need more protection than eyes? What about all the signboards, glaring lights and colors, ramshackle buildings, walls and fences, rubbish piles and innumerable forms of ugliness which now offend the eye when any person of intelligence and taste once grows conscious of them and takes a good look?

Having made the world quiet, we may also make it beautiful.

WAR ON STARLINGS.

Starlings, imported from England a generation ago, continue to multiply, and have now scattered pretty well over the eastern half of the continent.

One such community in Ohio, a city of 60,000 people, has been so annoyed by the flocks of starlings now swarming there and roosting in the trees that its council has ordered the chief of police to drive out the intruders.

Perhaps the opposition to this bird, and the alarm felt at its increase, are really unjustified. Individuals in many places who have carefully observed the starling seem to agree that it is a likeable creature, far less objectionable than the English sparrow, or than some of the other varieties of blackbirds which gather in flocks and rob neighborhoods of sleep.

Its raspings, wheezings and twitterings are not harsh and raucous, nor even unmusical. Occasionally it really sings. Often it gives amusing imitations of other birds. It does useful work in destroying insects. On the whole, it is a pleasant, friendly little rascal.

FEMINISTS' GOLDEN AGE.

British feminists are reported as believing their country "on the threshold of a golden age of women." They have been particularly cheered by the flight of Amy Johnson to Australia and the winning of the King's Prize at the Bisley rifle meet by Marjorie Foster.

In addition to the sporting accomplishments of these two young women, other feminine achievements are proved by the presence on the program of the British association for the Advancement of Science of 30 women speakers.

It would be unfortunate if a golden age of women meant the coming of a dark age of men. It is more likely to mean general progress for the whole of civilization, and should be regarded as altogether splendid.

After reading Calvin Coolidge's daily editorial carefully for a few weeks, we're almost convinced that two times two is four, what goes up must come down, man is mortal, and things are not so bad as they might be, and other things being equal it's just as well to let nature take her course.

BAD FOR GRASS.

A lot of wine, beer and whisky destroyed by a federal marshal the other day was regarded as "rare old liquor." Some of it dated back as far as 1920. A crowd gathered around in the hope of salvaging a little of it.

But, says the reporter, "those who had come in hope of just a taste left when the grass began to turn yellow." It must have been pretty bad stuff, they decided, and age hadn't improved it much. The poison may have grown a bit smoother, but if it killed the grass, what might it do to human stomachs?

Many drinkers, however, never worry about such trifling considerations.

AGRICULTURAL LIMITATIONS.

Alexander Legge, chairman of the federal farm board, tells farmers in New York state that, if properly organized, he "cannot see any reason why agriculture might not go farther than industry, inasmuch as most of the farmer's products are consumed every day and several times a day, and the consumption must be fairly continuous if we are to live."

The capacity of the consuming public for manufactured products is almost limitless. We could all use a good deal more clothing, furniture, rugs, toys, pictures, jewelry, automobiles, etc., if we had the money. But generally speaking, we couldn't use much more food. The farmer's market is comparatively limited. And he makes it worse by speeding up production.

Farm organization is fine. But after that, must there not be limitation somehow of production and of farm population?

A labor leader says the five-day week is inevitable. Obviously so, if we're to provide Saturday patronage for all these baby golf courses.

Roger Babson, who a year ago was advising people to sell stocks, is now advising them to buy.

The smaller cities are "America's new frontier," and the big cities supply the settlers.

Amnel Confident He Will Reach Rome In Safety

ROOSEVELT FIELD, Ill., Sept. 12.—Roy W. Amnel, 33-year-old Minnesotan, is confident he is going to reach Paris, or perhaps Rome, when the weather clears sufficiently to allow his departure from here.

"I'm going to circle over Paris and just so there'll be no doubt," he said today, "I'm going to drop a note at Le Bourget. Then if I have enough gas, I'm going on to Rome—to Berlin anyway."

The stream-lined Lockheed explorer monoplane which will carry the blonde flier off on the road to adventure is far more powerful than Lindbergh's Spirit of St. Louis. Its wisp motor develops 425 horse power and the ship will carry 817 gallons of fuel when it leaves the runway here.

The animal was able to make its way through the woods with the agility of a normal deer.

Fake Corpse Causes Automobile Crash

CHIPPWA FALLS, Wis., Sept. 13.—There was blood on the pavement and blood on the body, so a woman driver fainted and her car smashed into another. When police arrived they found an awed, uncovered group about the gory sight. One patrolman noted the smell of paint and thought the blood too thick. Instead of calling an ambulance he kicked the body over and revealed a dummy coated with red paint. Search was started for boy pranksters.

WARNER MEMORIAL UNIVERSITY

Warner Memorial—

Thursday morning but the chapel Friday was the first regular chapel service. At this service Miss Grace Bailey, of Coffeeville, Mississippi, the new Dean of Music, rendered a splendid number on the piano and Mrs. H. T. Reynolds, in charge of the Department of Voice, gave a vocal solo. Both of these numbers were much appreciated. Dr. J. T. Wilson, president of the school, then followed with a short talk, which was greatly enjoyed by both students and faculty.

The University is fortunate in securing a very splendid faculty this year. The faculty personnel is as follows:

Dr. J. T. Wilson, president; E. O. Bailey, vice president and dean; E. W. Barnett, professor of Bible; Lucella Warren, superintendent of preparatory work; Beatrice Smith, professor of mathematics and physical science; Harry T. Reynolds, professor of government and history; Clara Frances Ward, professor of English; Irene Smith, professor of foreign and modern languages; Lenora Reynolds, professor of voice; Hutchins H. Ward, professor of social sciences; Thelma V. Riddle, professor of education and public speaking; Grace Bailey, director of school of music; Henry E. White, physical education and athletics.

These instructors are all Christian men and women with degrees from accredited colleges, and fully capable of handling the work for which they have been chosen.

Warner Memorial University is chartered as a standard four year major college, although offering only Freshman and Sophomore work this year and expects to offer Junior work in 1931 and Senior work in 1932. The Academy Department offers the full four years of high school work.

The University has not as yet held its formal opening. There will be a special dedication service a little later and formal opening program, and this date will be announced later. At this time, every one will be invited and welcomed.

Athletics will play an important part in the school calendar this year. The new coach is now on the grounds and the first football practice and work out was announced for Friday evening. The school is eager to work up a splendid team this year. Basketball and baseball also will play an important part. It is not yet too late to register and any of the Eastland young folk who are interested may come to the school office this week where Dr. Wilson or Dean Bailey will be glad to meet them and where they may enroll for the year.

Warner Memorial University expects to experience a years work of which all Eastland and all Texas will be proud. The courses offered are equal to those offered in the best colleges of the state. There will be many activities of interest throughout the year and the people of Eastland are urged to keep in touch with these activities and are welcomed at the school at any time.

BOONVILLE, Mo., Sept. 13.—Discipline was stern at Missouri's reformatory for boys here today following the thwarting of a reformatory escape plot within a week. Information received from an inmate, late yesterday acting on boys, Lawrence Graves, Kansas City and Leonard McConnell, St. Louis, and exalted from them a confession that they planned to stab a guard and use his pistol to escape.

The plot came only a few days after the escape of Tony Vriski, who shot and killed C. E. Chrane of Boonville in his attempt to flee. McConnell and Graves admitted they intended to give up an automobile in Boonville in which they could escape. Vriski's attempt to escape in that manner ended in Chrane's death. Kennedy Sticks To Story About Myhars Killing HOUSTON, Tex., Sept. 13.—C. D. Kennedy, 21-year-old New Orleans seaman, was sticking to his story today after six hours of quizzing in the slaying of his companion, H. M. Myhars, about 45.

Deputy Sheriffs charged him with Myhars' murder Friday. Myhars' body was found about 6 a. m. Friday in a ditch on the Crosby road about half a mile beyond the San Jacinto river.

Kennedy apparently was in good spirits after the long grilling. He said he and Myhars were stopped in the road by a negro and two white men.

The negro guarded him, he said, while the two men drove off with Myhars in the partners' auto. He said he feared Myhars had been killed, because there was blood on the automobile when one man returned with it. The negro, and white man drove away in their car, he said, and he came to Houston in the bloody car.

He explained that blood spots on his trousers got there from the car. Fingerprint experts tried to find prints on the car but there were none. Kennedy is being held without bond pending examining trial. He was to be questioned further today, Kennedy said he

CHAPTER I
Rogers whirled about, color in her cheeks deepening. A fluttering little laugh escaped her throat. "Hello," she began, but trusted.

Celia, where in the world rushing off to on a hot date? Guess I surprised you, but I'm glad to see you. It's the most exciting time to speak she hurriedly.

...to Europe. Isn't Mother and I. We're taking a northern cruise—Scotland and the Scandinavian countries, and then finish Paris. Isn't it marvelous? It's so hot here. Let's have a cool off and I'll tell you about it. Besides, I want to know what you've been doing. It was the slightest perceptible of Celia Rogers' eyes.

"Helen, I'd love to, but can't. You can. Come on. It's five minutes." Her smile.

"I've got an appointment awfully glad you're going such a wonderful trip. I wish I could hear all about it. I'll see you again when you leave."

"We're calling a week later, then. Have a grand time."

Helen Spencer could hardly believe Celia was off down here and the bright smile which she had noticed was Celia did not look back, but on bravely.

...were two excellent times she could not waste time. She was off with Helen that afternoon.

...to be found in the slim little purse clenched in Rogers' left hand. The address written in ink on a slip of paper with purple ink. Celia was on her feet that address to apply to.

...to have the job—she was repeating this to herself as she hurried along. It was not to be reminded the habit had been formed these long days of job office just ahead might be chances, but so far Celia had been so far Celia who was 17 (going to be 18 months), a graduate of High School, possessor of a weeks-old diploma and recommendation from her commercial instructor, had visited one place after another without success.

...was why she was spending most of this "hottest July" tramping the streets of Baltimore and looking out of place in surroundings. Her flushed cheeks were slightly moist, but the silver vanity case which had passed a dozen times could not be damaged by burning heat waves reflected from pavement and the air. The brown hair should have been a soft, frame about her young face curled into damp wisps below the brim of her straw hat. The blue linen dress and crisp that morning and crumpled.

...of all (Celia had not noticed) was a runner all of inches long down the back of her precious silk hose.

...turned a corner, pausing an evening to wipe trickles of perspiration from her forehead.

"...she sighed, and seemed relief in the sigh. The window before her were half a dozen stickers: "Try Social Sunday," "Cool Off Clover Club," "Fresh Fruit" and others. Through the electric breeze came, Celia's skirt back.

...in pretty pastel dresses inside, laughing with a man clad in white. Her chin lifted and her shoulders tensed. She walked away. The girl's brown eyes were nearly as large, near-deeply expressive as Margaret Rogers was Celia's. To Margaret her daughter's lowliness was beauty in a rascal order. This was an era, of course. The moxie, tired by hours of waiting, saw the piquant and well-molded chin, the curved figure and the girl's eyes and saw them all in the eyes of love. She knew her daughter beautiful.

...were sisters, though who knew? ready, that away from the broil of the street was attractive to be singled out in almost anything.

...Celia's pretty face which Helen Spencer took to be Helen Spencer though the two were sisters, though who knew? ready, that away from the broil of the street was attractive to be singled out in almost anything.

...important financial was the daughter of a fitter in a Charles street dress shop. Celia's mother had earned those few coins remaining in the girl's purse. For a long time now Mrs. Rogers had earned every cent which had paid for food and lodging for herself and her daughter.

So, though Celia and Helen Spencer had sat side by side in French class and during ordeals of mathematics and chemistry, and though Celia could describe all of Helen's party dresses and most of the parties at which they had been invited to the Spencer home. She had not even expected such an invitation.

Both girls were graduated now—Helen setting off for Europe and Celia hunting work.

If there was a trace of bitterness in the girl's face as she hurried along the hot street, it should be forgiven. Bitterness comes so easily to those for whom the chance to work is an unobtainable luxury.

Celia Rogers' lunch had been a glass of milk and sandwich eaten at a soda fountain counter. The three little coins in her purse would have totaled less than the price of the rich mixture of fruits and cream which Helen Spencer was consuming at that moment.

Celia turned again into a side street. Half way down the block she hesitated before a brick office building, glancing up at the number over the doorway.

Yes, this was the place. She entered.

"Watkins Letter Company" was the name of Celia hunted for on the office directory board in the lobby. She found it. The Watkins Letter Company was located, according to the directory, on the fourth floor of the building.

The girl signaled for the elevator and a few seconds later stepped into the fourth floor corridor. "Third door to your left, ma'am," the languid, dark-skinned elevator operator volunteered, pointing toward an open door.

Celia nodded. Suddenly there was something tight in her throat. The feeling was familiar. It was always this way just before screwing up courage to step out boldly before the unknown person who would be waiting on the other side of the threshold and make the familiar little speech.

It was all wrong. Celia knew that perfectly well. She had been told dozens of times about the value of confidence, the importance of the "approach" in asking for employment. At school the commercial instructor regularly coached her classes on these subjects.

Celia had learned the lessons, but they wouldn't work.

She popped back the lid of her silver vanity case, dabbed at her gleaming nose with the tiny powder puff and tried ineffectually to rearrange the straggling wisps of hair. No use! She looked a wreck and knew it.

Suddenly her lips set in a firm line and she hurried down the hall. Celia paused in the open doorway. She saw a large room before her, light though the shades were pulled at one side. Beyond a wooden railing several girls worked at typewriters. Inside the railing at a desk facing the entrance sat a girl with red hair.

She was reading a book. Four feet away an electric fan buzzed loudly, drowning out the sound of Celia's footsteps.

No one took any notice of the girl in the doorway. Celia cleared her throat and stepped forward. "Excuse me. Is this the office of the Watkins Letter Company?" The red-headed girl raised her

"Sorry," the other shook her head. "Just fill in the blank. They'll let you know if they want you."

It didn't seem fair. She wasn't even being given a chance!

With careful penmanship Celia filled in the card before her, since there seemed nothing else to do. She was not helped by the knowledge that the young woman at the nearby desk continued to eye her curiously.

"Name," "Parent or Guardian," "Education," "Place Where Last Employed." These were some of the words printed on the card. They were all answered quickly except the last one.

In more than one office lack of experience had cost Celia a job. She had thought these last desperate days of inventing names of past employers. She gave up the idea because after all, Celia Rogers was well equipped with common sense.

"No experience," she stared at that blank line and then wrote in her neat hand, "No previous experience."

Celia had received high grades in the commercial classes at Western. She had won honors at speed tests and practical hour after hour at home. Miss Willis, the instructor, had said there was no question that she was qualified for a commercial position.

"When do you think I may hear?" she asked the girl at the desk as she returned the sheet of paper.

"Oh, tomorrow—maybe next day."

The older woman was reading what Celia had written. Suddenly she pounced on the line headed "Experience."

"Experience, huh! Well, why didn't you say so? This office is only for very experienced, high speed workers. They won't have any other kind. No need of your leaving this here!"

"You mean—I haven't got a chance?"

"Didn't you hear me say they won't have anyone without experience?"

Suddenly Celia Rogers saw red. "The ad in the paper didn't say that," she answered hotly. "The ad said this office wanted a stenographer. I can work as fast as lots of girls who've been out of school two years. If I could only see the man and show him how fast I can type—"

It was without effect. The red-haired young woman smiled perfunctorily and with an air of aloofness returned to her book.

Celia started to leave, then turned back.

"Will you see that that blank I filed in goes to the manager—" blurted out. Her cheeks burned. She didn't like the woman in green.

"Oh, you want a job?" The young woman shifted to a tone of snappy efficiency. "Mr. Norton isn't the one to see about that. Sit down in that chair there and I'll give you a blank to fill in."

It didn't sound promising. Celia Rogers had filled in employment blanks before.

"But—there is a vacancy here, isn't there?" she persisted.

The red-headed one nodded. She handed Celia a sheet of paper bearing a printed form and continued to study the girl openly.

"Yeah, there's a vacancy. The job's takin' letters and some office work. There's been several in ahead of you, though. Fill in the blank and put down your telephone number. They'll call you if they want you."

Celia looked at the blank, moved uncomfortably.

"But couldn't I see the man who hires people?"

Suffered Five Years—Kidney And Stomach Ailments Also Banished.

MR. N. R. DANIEL

"I suffered from rheumatism for four of five years," said Mr. N. R. Daniel, 808 East Arlington avenue, Fort Worth. "This settled in my left leg and hips and I became so stiff that I walked with a limp. I could not stoop sufficiently to lace my shoes. Later became afflicted with stomach pains caused by gas. My kidneys became affected and I suffered constant back pains."

"I watched local endorsements of Konjola and decided to give it a trial. I noticed a change while I was taking the first bottle so I continued the treatment. Today the pains of rheumatism have entirely passed. I move my limbs freely and with little effort. The stomach and kidney ailments have gone the way of my rheumatism and I no longer suffer from constipation. Even head catarrh which bothered me for years has been relieved by this new medicine."

"The files of Konjola contain many such instances. Konjola is free from alcohol, nerve-depressing drugs or heart-depressing chemicals.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Beginning as an extra, ANNE WINTER has progressed rapidly and is now under contract at Grand United, one of the largest of the Hollywood studios. DAN RORIMER, former New York newspaper man, now a scenario writer, is in love with Anne, but he is not meeting with much success and he regards his feeling for her as a rather hopeless one. PAUL COLLIER, who writes a daily movie column for a string of newspapers, shares Dan's apartment. He has great faith in Rorimer's ability, despite the latter's discouragement. A play that he had written for the stage while in New York is returned to Dan, unaccepted, and Anne and Collier read it and are enthusiastic. They urge him to revise it for the movies.

This he does. Eventually it is accepted by Grand United. Knowing that Anne would like to play a dramatic role, Rorimer suggests to studio executives that she be given a test for the leading feminine part. GARRY SLOAN is to direct the picture. He gives her a test and she wins the role. Sloan is the biggest director in Hollywood and Anne is slated over her opportunity.

Dan proposes to her, but she is forced to tell him that she is not at all sure she loves him. Following this, Garry Sloan shows her the Hollywood hills, and she takes her out. Rorimer begins to travel with a new crowd, and an actress named MARIS FARRELL shows some interest in him. She and Dan go driving one evening through the Hollywood hills, and under the spell of a perfect night they both get romantic and Maris recites poetry to him.

FRECKLES AND HIS FRIENDS

A Discovery

MOM'N POP

Too Green To Pick

"I like both of them," Dan said with a smile. "They're comforting philosophy for the morning after."

Maris laughed. "I didn't know you took them with aspirin." "Aspirin doesn't always work," Dan smiled into them with his own and then bent his head and kissed her.

She did not try to avoid it, but she said after a silent moment, "I didn't expect that."

And Dan tightened his arm around her. "Are you sure?" he asked. "I don't see how I could help it."

Maris was silent. They lingered there for some minutes longer, but she presently reminded him of the time and he drove her home. There he would have kissed her good night but she protested.

"No, Dan."

So he shook hands with her instead, although he did feel that her objection might not have been a serious one. They parted with the understanding that they would go horseback riding the following Sunday morning.

Another week passed, and part of another. Dan was keeping very busy, and, as Collier had predicted, he continued to learn things from working with Garry Sloan.

But there were times that he found it difficult to keep from becoming a little irritable in the face of some of the director's demands. A feeling somewhat akin to humility saved him from it—a recognition of the other's superior knowledge and of his unquestioned authority. He often sat in the projection room and watched the famous director, and no one viewed the rushes with as jealous or critical an eye as Sloan, as the result of which he was ruthless in ordering retakes. And frequently these necessitated a change here and there in an actor's lines—a word or two to catch a laugh, or the building up of a situation that seemed to him not quite satisfactory.

But Rorimer gave him his best, and he managed to be cheerful about it.

When she was not in front of the camera herself, Anne Winter often lingered on the stage to watch the others, and she sometimes sat beside Dan Rorimer and talked with him in a low voice as Sloan rehearsed a scene. She ate lunch with him frequently, too, although usually there were others with them. Anne seemed especially anxious to be friendly to him.

Once as they sat together watching the taking of "stills," Dan saw Garry Sloan walk that way and frown and turn away, and Rorimer sensed that there might be something here that the director did not altogether approve.

And he wondered what it might be. His first thought was that the sound of their voices might have disturbed the man, but he remarked then that others about them were talking and laughing—some of them rather loudly—and he concluded that he was quick to pick up things. Those who worked with Sloan were at high tension; it was easy for them to be "jumpy."

But later an unwelcome recollection came to mind—the bit of gossip he had overheard at the tea with Maris Farrell, linking Sloan's name with Anne's. And still later he recalled what Sylvia Patterson had told him; and once recalled, it was hard to put from him.

ONCE UPON A TIME

Without knowledge of navigation other than that which he had taught himself, Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt, of New York, directed a cruise of a small yacht and chartered the Maine coast, when he was 13.

"A lot of funny things happen in this village, Dan."

The fact remained, though, that Sloan had been offended, and Sloan had influence in Hollywood.

One didn't take stories like this too seriously, Dan thought; nevertheless, there might be wisdom in being careful not to give the man cause for offense, especially during production of a picture that might mean everything to Anne Winter and a great deal to himself.

But it was not on his own account that he felt any concern; he owed nothing to Sloan's good will, he figured, and he felt there was little that a man's whim could do to him to cause him to lose any sleep, Anne, though, was different.

Anne Winter might some day be a star if the fates were kind enough, and no one could do more for her than Garry Sloan.

He wondered then if the director really had become "interested" in Anne Winter, as gossip had hinted. And he wondered, with a touch of jealousy and resentment of Sloan's power, what Anne might think of it.

He watched Sloan now as he hunched forward in his chair, frowningly intent on Anne and Lester Moore in a scene. The two were sitting at a restaurant table and Moore, as Michael, the dapper, handsome gangster, was brazenly holding her hand, contemptuously unmindful of the other diners about them.

But he was good—very good. He was beautiful, swaggering and tough. Michael was back from the war, unreformed, conscienceless and scheming as ever; and his "girl" was a little fearful for him and afraid of him. The scene ended. Sloan nodded and sat back in his chair. He called Anne over to him and she sat beside him and listened while he talked in a low voice, and Dan got up and strolled outside. At the door he ran into Phillips, bound for one of the other stages. Phillips stopped for a moment to ask a question.

"Sloan shooting tonight?" Dan shook his head. "Not unless he changes his mind. Anne Winter said he wanted to rehearse her a little bit, though. She's got a tough scene tomorrow."

Phillips nodded. He asked Dan what he thought of Garry Sloan by this time.

"He's great," Dan said. "He's some director."
The other chuckled and said,

"He'll do till the next one comes along, I guess," and he raised his hand and passed on.

Dan wandered back to the set. The thing that Anne was to do on the morrow was something that the manuscript had not called for in its original version. When Michael was shot, Rorimer had presented the grief of Jenny, his "girl," as dry-eyed and stunned and inarticulate. Sloan had changed that. It was not emotional enough to suit him. As it was now written, Anne was called upon to sob and shed tears over the loss of her sweetheart.

"We want to create more pity for her," Sloan had said. "I want you to turn it on, Anne—all the way."

Anne had agreed with him that the scene would be a "bigger" one that way, but she was a little afraid of it. She told Mona: "I'll never please him—never."

Sloan was discussing it with her now, explaining just what he expected her to do. And he said he had changed his mind about keeping her late and having her go through it.

"You know what I want, Anne. You can save it all for tomorrow. Can't we have dinner somewhere instead? We can go to some nice cool place and talk things over."

And Anne nodded. That would be much better, she said. "I'm glad you're not going to make me work this evening. I've a headache; I'm afraid I'll be terrible."

Sloan laughed. "I'm not worried about you, Anne. I'm sorry about your headache. Maybe a little ride, and dinner, will chase it away."

He let her go then and turned his attention to the scene that was hatched from his direction, and Anne moved off toward her dressing room. Rorimer, sitting off to one side, saw her coming toward him, and he smiled and asked how she was feeling. "Ready to knock 'em dead!"

"I feel," Anne replied, "as if I'm awaiting for the executioner to come and take me away. Do you know how that feels?"

Dan nodded. "I've never been there, but I've got an imagination. Rehearsing tonight?"

"No. I've been given the customary privilege of selecting what I want for my last meal." She laughed. "That's kind, isn't it?"

"Very," Dan said, and Anne waved to him and went her way. Sloan was ready by the time she had removed her makeup and changed her costume. She found him waiting outside.

"There you are," he said, his eyes showing approval of her dress. "How's the headache?"
"Better. I think the thought of the reprieve cured it."
"I DO have my humane moments. Where shall we eat? Feel hungry yet?"
"Not very."
"Well, we'll see if a little drive won't work up an appetite." He helped her into his car, climbed in beside her and told her to rest. Anne was tired, and to lie back with the wind fanning her cheeks was restful. He took her, after a long drive, to a quiet little inn, where their waiter bowed deeply and called him by name. Sloan ordered discriminately for her, and he gave explicit instructions to the waiter concerning the preparation of a salad. Anne thought it delicious.

"Is it your own idea?"
"Part of it."
Throughout the dinner he chatted agreeably about things that Anne was interested in. But afterward, while he lingered over his coffee and cigar, he became silent and thoughtful. He said presently, "I was wondering about you, Anne."
"You were?"
He nodded slowly and knocked the ash from his cigar. "I was wondering if you've ever been in love."

BIRD ROOF

Bird Paroid Built-Up—The White-Topped Roof

Bird Paroid Built-Up Roof is especially designed for flat roofs, but it will not slip and can be used on sloping roofs as well.

Bird Paroid Cap Sheet, made from the same long-lived materials as the famous Bird Paroid Roofing, forms a solid membrane over the entire roof. It seals in the waterproof qualities of the asphalt felt and asphalt compound beneath.

The special white surfacing used on the Paroid Cap Sheet reflects the sun's rays thus preventing deterioration.

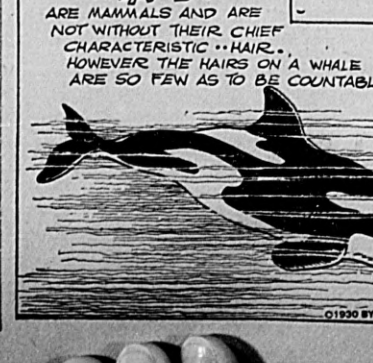

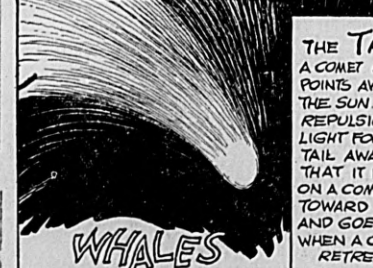

There is no loose gravel or other material to wash off and clog the gutters or leave pit holes in the roof.

The light weight permits its use on light roof construction.

Aside from general use on industrial buildings, office buildings and warehouses it is excellent for porches and other roofs where there is considerable walking. It will not puncture under ordinary circumstances.

Livestock Held Up Well During The Last Month

By United Press
AUSTIN, Tex., Sept. 13—Live stock held up "remarkably well" during August in view of drought conditions, Carl H. Robinson and F. E. Finley, Federal statisticians, said in their report as of Sept. 1 released here today.
Cattle condition declined only 4 points to 78 per cent during the period, and sheep condition declined five points to 75 per cent, the report said.
Only favored localities received an appreciable amount of moisture during the month, and additional rains were urgently needed in all sections. There are areas in the state that have an abundance of feed, the statisticians reported, and the ranges are fairly good.

In South Texas rains are needed, but the stock is not suffering. Much of the central portion of the state, the western edge of the Panhandle, the coastal belt, and all of the southern portion have produced sufficient amount of feed to meet all logical demand, and a few of the more favored localities have produced a surplus.

The condition in the sheep and goat area is becoming critical, according to the report. The animals held up well to the time of the survey, but were beginning to show the effects of the protracted drought. Prospects are that fewer sheep will be shorn this year than usual.

Pop Pops Off

POP WARNER, Stantord's great coach, has found something else the matter. He took time off while running the Northwestern Coaching School recently to offer gloomy views on the future of athletics at Stantord.

It seems that Stantord's entrance requirements are high. You can't get into the school merely on the merits of your game of three-cushion billiards.

Pop thinks small entering classes and high requirements may reduce available material for the teams, particularly the football teams. It sounds as though Pop has been talking things over with Alonzo A. Starks, who unveiled this view about a University of Chicago as I remember, no later than last fall.

Something will have to be done about it. Maybe the Tom Thumb architects can work it out.

People who have seen Pop's teams in recent years would find it hard to understand how so many six-foot-three 200-pounders can be so intelligent. Maybe strong minds and strong backs go together, after all.

Weekly Sunday School Lesson

Texts—Jer. 1:4-10; 31:27-34

Then the word of the Lord came unto me, saying:

Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee; and before thou camest forth out of the womb I sanctified thee, and I ordained thee a prophet unto the nations. Then said I, Ah, Lord God! behold, I cannot speak: for I am a child.

But the Lord said unto me, Say not, I am a child: for thou shalt go to all that I shall send thee, and whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak.

Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and the house of Judah with the seed of man, and with the seed of beast.

And it shall come to pass, that like as I have watched over them, to pluck up, and to break down, and to throw down, and to destroy:

of Egypt; which my covenant they brake, although I was a husband unto them, saith the Lord:

But this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel: After those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and will write in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people.

And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord: for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more.

The International Uniform Sunday School Lesson for September 14, Responsibility of the Individual. Jer. 1:4-10; 31:27-34.

By WM. E. GILROY, D. D., Editor of The Congregationalist. From one of the so-called minor prophets, Amos, as we have seen, a man great in character and service, we turn now to a major prophet, Jeremiah, sometimes noted for the delicateness of his message, but more noted for the courage with which he refused to use homely words in a tragic time and for the pointedness of his rebuke to his and to afflict; so will I watch over them, to build, and to plant, saith the Lord.

In those days they shall say no more, The fathers have eaten a sour grape, and the children's teeth are set on edge.

But every one shall die for his own iniquity; every man that eateth the sour grape, his teeth shall be set on edge.

Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah:

Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt, and the clearness of his message concerning the way of life and hope.

The core of Jeremiah's message is in his emphasis upon individual responsibility. He begins with himself. He is conscious of a call of God that came in the very purpose of his life. He has the assurance that he was sanctified even before birth and that he has been called as a prophet. In spite of this call he feels his weakness, and he assures the Lord that he knows not how to speak, but with all his hesitations he heeds the call and goes to do and say the thing given him. It is a great picture of a

FAMILY MENU

BY SISTER MARY, NEA Service Writer

THE delightful flavor of mushrooms can be used in combination with other ordinary materials to create a truly delicious dish. With fresh mushrooms being brought into our markets from nearby mushroom farms and many excellent canned varieties also on the market, there is always some form of this delicacy available.

Cultivated mushrooms are not prohibitive in price and are more desirable than those gathered in the fields. Too much danger from poisoning lies in eating mushrooms which have been gathered by anyone but an authority on this subject. The nutritive value of mushrooms is comparatively good. They are particularly noted for their protein content and are often called "vegetable beefsteaks." However, as they are almost 90 per cent water, a goodly quantity of them would have to be eaten to make them a true meat substitute. Even then they are deficient in some of the nutrients found in lean meats. The chief value of mushrooms lies in their unusual and, to most people, appetizing flavor.

Don't Wash Mushrooms. The preparation of mushrooms is quite important, for careless handling can mar both their flavor and tenderness. Unless very dirty and sandy mushrooms should not be washed. They are very delicate in structure and water tends to destroy their flavor as well as make them tough. Separate the caps from the stems. Scrape the stems and peel the caps if the skin is tough. The stems are often tougher than the caps and are used separately or, if used in the same dish with the caps, are allowed extra time for cooking. If mushrooms must be washed, do it very gently, taking care that the gills do not become water-soaked. Dry them on a soft cloth and turn cap gills downward to dry.

A flavoring for soups and sauces can be made with the peelings. Put in sauce pan, cover with cold water, bring to the boiling point and simmer closely covered for 15 minutes. Strain through cheesecloth and the stock is ready to use.

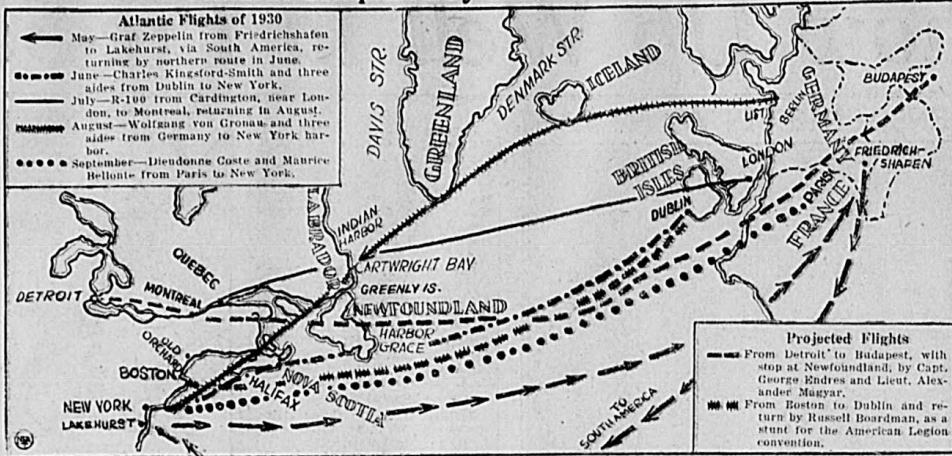

We are prone to regard mushrooms as a luxury and use them principally with expensive materials.

Daily Menu LUNCHEON—Creamed lima beans and mushrooms on toast, broiled tomatoes, rice pudding, milk, tea. DINNER—Steamed haddock, shoestring potatoes, creamed green beans, cucumber-ontion-pepper salad, lemon sponge, milk, coffee.

rials to make rich "company" dishes. If we would use them with such homely fare as spinach we might find this unpopulous vegetable winning favor in our families' eyes. Cook spinach as usual. Prepare a few mushrooms and steam in butter for five minutes. Add cooked spinach and toss over fire until thoroughly mixed. The extra cost and time are nothing compared to the improvement to the spinach.

Dried lima beans become "fat for a king" when combined with mushrooms. The beans are soaked and cooked as usual before combining with canned or freshly cooked mushrooms. Dried mushrooms are worth experimenting with. They can be soaked and used to astonishing advantage in made dishes of all sorts. Stews and casseroles made with cheap cuts of meats gain much by the addition of a few mushrooms.

Atlantic Conquered By Air 7 Times In 1930

The year 1930 seems destined to go down in history as a banner year for trans-Atlantic flights, the recent westward crossing by Coste and Bellonte being the seventh successful oceanic air voyage of the year, as well as the first ever to be made from the continent to the United States. The above map shows the routes of the two dirigibles, Graf Zeppelin and R-100, both of which twice crossed the ocean, and the routes of the three successful airplane flights as well as the proposed itinerary of two other heavier-than-air expeditions expected to start soon. The Graf Zeppelin was first to span the Atlantic this year, coming to Lakehurst by way of South America and returning over the northern route. The R-100 crossed the north Atlantic on its way to Montreal as well as on the return journey. The German flyers, headed by Wolfgang von Gronau, made their flight in a series of hops, while Charles Kingsford-Smith, the Australian, spanned the ocean in one jump, but was forced to land at Newfoundland before continuing to New York City. The projected flights of Russell Boardman to Ireland and return and of Captain Endres from Detroit to Buenaque are also shown.

of Eastland County Jail Writes of Conditions In Prison

Writing letter was written in the Eastland County Jail concerning conditions while being an inmate of the jail.

The letter throws a light on the way in which Pack handles the men who are in the jail.

That flowers smell better than the dead, and that you would appreciate the jailers at the county jail? If the public knows of the conditions rendered and advice given to each inmate.

Some here about two weeks ago for the first time to show and partiality or favor to any, but rather, to do anything for the welfare of any inmate.

Have seen him get up at the night to help inmates. We had a short case worthy of men's attention get in here, and of same and expressed to get rid of the health officer called the health officer (Health officer is not more of him later).

Time thereafter that would so much as grunt would call the doctor or nurse. He would bring things to eat, trying his best to get the poor fellow in even. The consequences of what is off the stuff and forward to better things.

They got out of tobacco things. When he four jailer goes down in the jail for us. He will return and return same other words he "shoots" with all the better in that all others respect a family.

Admit any visitor and deny all visitors be respect.

See better food than the working man has and there plenty of it.

At the jail sanitary at all demands that we keep it clean.

No malice towards anyone. A man, an escaped convict, in here a few days. This man was in an break here; this man of the leaders of the at when he was put in a cage over his head. Nothing ever happened for him when prisoners for such a man needs accommodations of all? We tell you in my next letter, look, boy, tell her. The most important day of the new schedule is Nov. 8, when Bay- lor's Bears face the Longhorns of Texas University at Waco, while T. C. U. meets Rice and S. M. U. tackles the A. and M. cadets else- where. On other Saturdays, no more than two games are schedul- ed to permit fans to attend as many contests as possible.

Intersectional tilts and easier non-conference games break the schedule of conference games. De- spite the three hard games of the S. M. U. Mustangs billed with Notre Dame, Navy and Indiana, the fall football map favors the Methodist players.

Hard sledding is prophesied for Coach Francis Schmidt's Horned Frogs, who copped the 1929 title. T. C. U. has three hard confer- ence battles on consecutive Saturdays at the end of the season.

University of Arkansas is sched- uled to play only two regular con- ference teams, T. C. U. and A. and M. College, but the Razorbacks' games with Centenary and Louisi- ana State University will be count- ed as conference results by agree- ment of football officials a few months ago.

Intersectional games afford the highlights for the coming season. Prominent among these are S. M. U.'s three battles: A. and M.'s game with Nebraska at Lincoln Oct. 4, Rice's contest with Arizona at Houston Oct. 11, and A. and M. Tulane clash during the Texas- Oklahoma fair here Oct. 18, and Rice's game with Iowa State at Houston Dec. 6, a post-season con- test.

The 1930 Southwestern Confer- ence schedule follows:

- Oct. 11 T. C. U. vs. Arkansas at Fort Worth.
- Oct. 18 S. M. U. vs. Baylor at Waco. A. and M. vs. T. C. U. at College Station.
- Oct. 25 Arkansas vs. A. and M. at Little Rock, Ark. Texas vs. Rice at Houston.
- Nov. 1 Arkansas vs. Louisiana S. U. at Shreveport.
- Nov. 8 S. M. U. vs. Texas at Austin. Baylor vs. Texas at Waco. T. C. U. vs. Rice at Houston. S. M. U. vs. A. and M. at Dallas.
- Nov. 15 A. and M. vs. Rice at College Station. Texas vs. T. C. U. at Fort Worth.
- Nov. 22 S. M. U. vs. Rice at Houston. Baylor vs. T. C. U. at Fort Worth.
- Nov. 27 Texas vs. A. and M. at Austin. Arkansas vs. Centenary at Shreveport.

Jake Hamon Plays Breckenridge Today

The Jake Hamon Ollers will try to keep up their long winning streak today when they meet the fast Breckenridge Gull team, which is managed by Cy Watson an old Texas League pitcher. These two teams have met only one time this season and the Gulf won that game, 4-3.

The Jake Hamon Ollers have only been defeated three times this season which is the best record for any semi-pro team in the Oilbelt District. The Gulf team defeated them one time and the Chestnut & Smith team from Ranger defeated them twice. The Ollers have won sixteen games, one of these being over the strong Katy Railroad team from Fort Worth.

The Jake Hamon lineup will be Hargrove, 1b, Harbin 2b, Watson, ss, Harris, lf, Mills, cf, Coleman, rf, Renshaw, c, Black, p. The Gulf lineup will be Allen 1b, Scroggins, 2b, McCay, ss, Reynolds, 3b, Cox, lf, Lowery, cf, Russell, rf, Cravens, c, Purvis, p.

LOTS OF BEER IS SEIZED

Warner Memorial Lays Stress On Music Department

The Warner Memorial University is laying special stress on its department of music this year.

Miss Grace Bailey, Coffeyville, Missouri, graduate of Grenada College, Grenada, Mississippi, and of Kansas City Observatory of Music, Kansas City, Missouri, heads this department.

Full music courses are offered, leading to the degree of Master of Music. Classes in harmony, history of music, ear training, en- semble, orchestration and other work as well as full courses in violin, are a part of the curriculum.

Miss Bailey is an accomplished and capable instructor and those who have taken work under her have been more than pleased. She comes to Warner well recommend- ed. Miss Bailey is enrolling stu- dents daily in the courses men- tioned and may be reached by call- ing telephone 10 or by a personal interview at the new music studio in the administration building. Special attention is given to Juniors and special classes will be arrang- ed for these pupils.

Mrs. Reynolds, instructor of voice, was one of the University faculty last year and hence needs no introduction to the people of Eastland. Those who studied un- der her last year are enrolling again this year.

At a later date, Miss Bailey and Mrs. Reynolds will present a musi- cal concert under the auspices of the University. This will be held in one of the buildings down town, within easy reach of everyone and the time will be announced later.
