Three Men Are To Die Tonight

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla., July 16—Claude "Blackie" Hager, Ottawa county coal miner, will not die in the electric chair tonight at McAlester state penitentiary.

Hager scheduled to die for the hammer murder of Walter Harp, a white woman, walk to the electric chair.

Thoughts of all prisoners and prison officials turned toward the doomed trio—three men with less than fourteen hours to live. There was a change for clemency from Gov. W. J. Holloway for perhaps one.

Tom Guest, convicted of murder in a daylight bank raid, was resentful when he awoke today.

Claude "Blackie" Hager, convicted hammer murderer, awoke hoping desperately that the governor will save him from death because of an exonerating confession made by a prisoner lifer, his former pal, James Edward Forrest, negro, sentenced to death for attacking a white woman didn't sleep because "I drank a cup of strong coffee last night."

The deep intonation of a negro spiritual came from his cell a few minutes before the death row today and was drowned out by the whirl of an electric generator testing the death contrivance. He laughed and talked freely.

"It didn't bother me when they put us over here in death row last night," Guest said. "It was my last night and I wanted to do a good job of sleeping."

Forrest and Hager have accepted religion. Guest bitterly refuses spiritual advice.

Unless the governor grants him clemency, Hager will go to the chair with bitterness in his heart against Elmer Moore, a lifer, who two days ago wrote letters to state officials saying he would kill Walter Harp in Ottawa county during a drunken fishing party.

"He should have told that story a year ago instead of waiting until now when no one will believe him," said Hager. "I'll go down. I want my friends to protest any attempt for clemency he makes. I want him to die here like me."

Hager received a letter today from his brother, George, at Dallas. He answered the letter immediately.

To Ask T. R. C.'s Help In Reducing Oil Production

DALLAS, July 16.—Efforts to stop the Texas Railroad Commission intervene by proration to counteract the "grave emergency" of over-production in Texas crude oil will be made by a committee of the Texas Division, Mid-continent Oil and Gas Association.

Production exceeds the actual market by 75,000 barrels daily, a committee reported to directors of the division here yesterday.

The committee was named to ask the commission for a hearing immediately, preparatory to drafting regulations for enforcing the new state pipe line law which the directors hope will render effective the proration program. The commission has withheld endorsement of the law ending submission of suggestions by the oil industry.

Keeping Tab On The State Candidates

CORPUS CHRISTI, Tex., July 16.—Stump oratory of the variety which has been in Texas vogue since the days of Jim Hogg was the weapon with which Clint C. Small of Wellington attacked three opposition candidates for governor at a rally here Tuesday night.

Tom Love was referred to as "a nyan who is so used to promoting discord as to be afraid that he can't even get along with himself any more." Both Sterling and "Ma" came in for their share of Small's criticism.

Small will speak tonight at Victoria.

DUBLIN, Tex., July 16.—Thomas B. Love spoke of himself as the only sane Tammany candidate and only sane quality in the race for governor whose qualifications had been passed on by the Supreme Court of Texas in an address here.

Love is optimistic over the outcome of the primaries. Sterling was the particular object of Love's attack.

BEAUMONT, Tex., July 16.—Special sessions of the Texas Legislature were called last night by Lieut. Gov. Barry Miller who declared they were expensive to taxpayers and accomplished little.

If elected governor, Miller assured his audience that he would "address the legislature, the psychology of which he had thoroughly learned in his 16 years of connection with it."

BROWNWOOD, Tex., July 16.—Former Gov. James E. Ferguson carried "Ma" campaign into Brown county yesterday, where a choice bit of the electoral vote of Texas centers.

James E. Ferguson took opportunity to deny Gov. Ian Moody's statement that he was seeking to place a political bloc in the state legislature.

The economic plight of home and land owners in Texas was given the attention of Ferguson, as well as a law to keep Texas money in Texas. Ferguson's proposal is to provide that no state bank can become a depository for the state or county that loans more than 10 per cent of its capital and deposits outside of Texas.

WICHITA FALLS, Tex., July 16.—Ross Sterling departed from his set speech here last night to stress the point that his rival candidate for governor was now exercising his influence in favor of embursing counties for money expended in building state highways.

"They are nearly all trying to get on the Sterling plan band wagon," he said.

Italy Protests The Killing Of Her Citizens

CARLO, July 16.—The Italian consul filed formal protest today with the Egyptian authorities against yesterday's rioting at Alexandria which resulted in the deaths of two Italians.

Apparently pre-concocted and well organized, the rioting broke out in the midst of a two-hour period of lunge in memory of several persons who were killed in comparatively small disorders at Mansurah last week.

British and Egyptian troops hurried to the aid of the police, and with fixed bayonets succeeded in clearing the principal thoroughfares, but the rioting continued in the side streets until evening.

An Italian boy was reported among the Europeans killed, while Major Patrick, an English police officer, was injured by a stone. Eight E. Europeans in all were reported killed.

LONDON, July 16.—The government has ordered two ships to proceed to Alexandria, Egypt, where fatal rioting occurred yesterday. Premier J. Ramsay MacDonald announced in the House of Commons today.

Trio Forced To Jump From Their Ship In Georgia

All Land Safely. Exhausted Fuel Supply Forced the Pilots to Take to Their Parachutes.

BOSTWICK, Ga., July 16.—The projected nonstop refueling flight of the Stinson-Detroit monoplane "K" from New York to Buenos Aires, came to a spectacular end here today when its three pilots leaped to safety in parachutes and a plane plunged 600 feet into the ocean.

The pilots, Randy Enlow, James McManis and Garfield T. Peed, were forced by rapidly dwindling fuel supply and inability even to land because of heavy rain clouds, to leap for their lives, circling over this town for two hours.

Roar of the plane as it soared over Bostwick drew more than 50 persons away from their customary occupations, providing a gallery for the thrilling airplane escapades.

"They couldn't have done anything else," G. A. Nunn, mayor of Bostwick, told the United Press in describing how the three men successfully quit their craft and floated safely to the ground, frequently obscured by rain clouds as they shot downward. They had flown all night after taking off from New York at 4:23 p. m. Tuesday. Entries in their log showed they passed over the cities of Washington and Spartansburg, S. C., but exceptionally thick flying weather prevented them from picking out a suitable landing place.

Their fuel gave out over an almost impossible terrain, so that even if they had been able to see the ground it would have been virtually impossible to effect a landing.

There was a hurried consultation aboard the ship as it cut in a wide circle over the town, knifing its way through ran clouds which intermittently shielded it from view of those below.

Watchers saw the "K" emerge from a cloud, and saw one of the crew walk out to the end of the wing, bracing himself until the force of the flight opened his parachute. He swayed downward, into a crowd of spectators.

A little later the second pilot crawled to the rear of the fuselage and leaped off, as the plane lost altitude.

As the third member of the crew cut off the ignition to prevent any possible explosion of the craft, and leaped out "over the wheel," it seemed to watchers that less than 800 feet separated the "K" and the ground.

He made it safely, however. The three airmen were floating groundward as their ship crashed into a thinly-wooded open space and tumbled into the sea.

The plane's right wing struck first. By agreement before they leapt, the airmen were to meet at the wreckage of the "K."

Bostwick citizens who rushed to the scene of the crash found the plane scattered around their ship, lying as they expected, the only serious injury was one slightly wrenched shoulder, not serious.

The fliers said their personal effects were taken to Monroe, Ga., twelve miles from here.

"We didn't see land for eight hours before we jumped, and you can believe me we were glad to find land not water, because we didn't have a very good idea where we were," Enlow told the United Press.

They were lost for hours, Enlow said, and at one time were reported even over Jacksonville, Fla., when they saw their fuel would not outlast the weather, they abandoned all thought of making Havana today, and turned northwest to be over land.

There were no refuellings during the night. The last fuel tank cleared was at Valley Stream, N. Y., Enslow said.

The crew of the "K" waited until the absolute last before quitting their ship. Its motor died and its propeller stopped. Then successively Darringer, Enslow and Peed leaped to safety.

The attempt of the fliers to link the two continents in a non stop refueling flight had been beset with ill luck from the state. Late in May they hopped off from Hartford, Conn., only to be forced down on Long Island. Delays of various kinds followed until the take off yesterday.

Then came additional trouble. For nearly five hours the plane hovered near Roosevelt Field, finally establishing four refueling contacts and heading south.

The plane was first sighted during the early morning hours over Spartanburg, where it dropped two flares. The airport then was lighted but the craft sped away.

A New Haven Conn., tooth paste company sponsored the flight.

MONROE, Ga., July 16.—The crew of the ill-fated monoplane "K" announced here today that they will remain here a few days, then go to New York for another shot "and make that nonstop flight to Buenos Aires."

"We'll make it, too," Randy Enslow, one of the three pilots, jumped to safety in a parachute when the "K's" fuel gave out in a rainstorm over Bostwick, told the United Press.

It was Enslow's third parachute; his third "because I had to."

KEEPING TAB—

DALLAS, Tex., July 16.—Formal arguments opposing the state bond issue for highway construction were made public by J. Barney Davis, president of the Anti-State Road Bond Association. Davis claims that the amendment necessary to the constitution before the voters would remove the right to express at the ballot box his views on the issuance of bonds.

Davis also stated that the $350,000,000 to be placed on Texas highways would eventually cost the state $550,000,000 through accruing interest.

CLARKSVILLE, Tex., July 16.—The Sterling forces have spent so much money in this campaign that a one-eye negro in the Brazos river bottoms can see that our election laws have been scandalously violated. Earle B. Mayfield claimed here Tuesday afternoon.

"The truth of the matter is the Sterling forces have spent more money in Tarrant county than a candidate for governor is allowed to spend in the entire state," Mayfield declared.

DALLAS, Tex., July 16.—Jesse Jones of Houston endorsed Ross Sterling for governor in a radio address last night. Explanation of Sterling's highway program was Jones' major topic.

"Whether we favor or oppose the state bond plan for building state highways, there should be no objection to allowing the people to vote on the question. We are still democratic," he asserted.

AMARILLO, Tex., July 16.—Charging Dan Moody with "meddling" in politics in order to secure the election of R. L. Bobbitt, Cecil Storey, candidate for attorney general, denied Moody's charge that he was a "Ferguson-candidate," and part of the bloc Ferguson is charged with trying to seat in the legislature.

"He is actually trying to do what he charges Ferguson wants to accomplish," Storey said of Moody.

TYLER, Tex., July 16.—The address of Senator J. D. Parnell, candidate for lieutenant governor, to educate and quit legislating, met with applause here Tuesday night. Parnell declared he was against any more laws. His address was also aimed against major oil companies and trusts.

MCKINNEY, Tex., July 16.—Hon. R. L. Henry, of Houston, candidate for the United States Senate, will speak on the courthouse lawn here Wednesday night. Supporters of Henry predict a large rally.

Senator on a wet platform, reported spending $304.50. Contributions to his campaign have been $320.

Instructions have been issued from the office of the state adjutant general here for presentation of a distinguished service medal to Brig. Gen. Jacob F. Wolters, Governor Moody is expected to make the presentation at the Texas National Guard cavalry camp at Mineral Wells on July 18. The medal was authorized by the last legislature.

Plans to co-ordinate the activities of the University of Texas, A. & M. College, Texas Technological College, State Teacher Colleges and other state supported schools to lessen the duplication of courses were discussed here today at a meeting of the state board of education and the governing boards of the schools and colleges.

Governor Dan Moody addressed the conference. He said he thought the next legislature should give the board of education an appropriation to make a thorough study of such consolidations. President H. Y. Benedict of the University of Texas and President T. O. Walton of A. & M. College spoke also.

CHICAGO, July 16.—Three bandits early today entered the apartment of William A. Decker, shoe store owner, tortured Decker for almost an hour by sticking pins in his bare feet in an attempt to make him tell where his diamonds were hidden, robbed him of $10 and a pair of cuff links valued at $57 and escaped, Decker told police he had been unable to tell the robbers where his diamonds were because he didn't have any diamonds.

Oddities in The News of Today

DALLAS, Tex., July 16.—His report to a challenge on the honor of Texas in general cost T. J. Thorne of Dallas $60.

Said a stranger who opened an uninvited acquaintance at the union terminal: "I think all Texans are huns. I have yet to see one who has any money. Now in Kentucky where I'm from—"

Thorne's pride was hurt, and he pulled a $60 roll of bills from his pocket to demonstrate the error of the stranger's opinion.

The self-styled Kentuckian scratched the roll and showed something of the speed of a blue grass thoroughbred in disappearing.

CHICAGO, July 16.—Edward Jones, an electrical worker, was mystified today when gangsters sprayed his home with machine gun bullets.

"I don't know anyone who'd want to kill me," Jones told police. Then an observant officer noticed that a house a few doors away bore the same kind of oddly striped awnings that many negroes were returning to their homes after evacuating them when threatened by mob.

An investigation disclosed that the other house with the odd awnings belonged to Edward "Spike" O'Donnell, south side beer racketeer and listed as one of the 28 "public enemies."

Just a slight error of gangland," remarked the officer.

Jones took down his awnings today.

YACHT TAKEN ACROSS ALPS

GENEVA, July 16.—Van Vroest, a Dutch millionaire, has taken his yacht over the Alps mountains.

Recently when preparing to go to his summer home at Montreux, on Lake Geneva, Van Vroest expressed a desire to have his yacht sent there.

Everyone said it couldn't be done. But Van Vroest is a millionaire and accustomed to having his wishes transformed into realities with the guilder as the magic wand.

So with his family and friends he set out from Rotterdam and followed the Rhine to Basle. There he was told the Swiss rivers and lakes were not deep enough to accommodate the yacht.

Van Vroest became angry. Finally an arrangement was made with a Swiss railway company to transport the craft across the Alps.

The yacht had to be dismantled because it was too large to pass through the tunnels and was moved at night when the traffic was light.

After 11 days the trip was over, the yacht was in the water and Van Vroest was out $5,000 expenses.

Judge Ewing said the negro's trial would be set for July 28. The special grand jury ordered by Judge W. R. Ewing of the thirty-first district court. Inflamed feeling in this section may cause the transfer of the trial to Miami.

Frankie Foster Is Enroute East

LOS ANGELES, Cal., July 16.—Frankie Foster, gangster wanted in Chicago under an indictment charging him with the murder of Edward J. Lingle, reporter, was taken from county jail here some time during the night and presumably was en route to the Illinois city today.

Authorities said yesterday that the start east would probably not be made until tonight or tomorrow, but Foster was not in his cell this morning.

Officials then said "they supposed" he was on his way to Chicago and refused to tell when he left the jail or how he was being taken.

Goldsborough Is Still Unconscious

BENNINGTON, Vt., July 16.—Frank Goldsborough, 19 year old aviator who suffered a skull fracture when the airplane he was piloting crashed in a forest near here Monday, remained unconscious at Putnam Memorial Hospital here today and his condition was described as very serious.

The youthful holder of the junior transcontinental flight record had lain planned beneath wreckage of his plane for almost 18 hours after the accident. He was conscious when Donald Meckler, New York publicity agent whom Goldsborough was flying to Keene, N. H. for a lecture engagement, left him in search of help after finding it impossible to extricate the pilot.

Frog Shooting Trial Attracts Much Interest

BOURGES, July 16.—The definition of fish, frogs and partridges, together with the respective merits of fishing with a gun and hunting with a rod, will provide lively arguments when the case of Monsieur Dominique Dupieux comes to trial.

For weeks the inhabitants of Bourges have been disturbed by the alternating croaks of huge frogs and the loud reports of a shot gun following the river bank the police soon discovered that M. Dupieux sat at his window, night cap on head, gun in hand, blasting away and one by one silencing the frogs of the river bank whose croaking kept him awake.

Even as the alert gendarmes stood by, the thundering reports continued between the intermittent and deep throated basso of the frogs. Realizing that both the hunting season was at an end and that the fishing season was not yet on, the vigilant sentries promptly arrested Monsieur Dupieux and charged him with infraction of the game laws, with disturbing the peace at night, with fishing out of season, with shooting out of season and with carrying a firearm without a permit.

If it can be ascertained that Monsieur Dupieux gathered up the frogs and ate them, he will be charged with the additional crime of obtaining provender illegally.

But Monsieur Dupieux simply observes he was assisting law and order by killing the noisy frogs, he denies he was hunting; he denies he was fishing as he sat in his bed room window, and he hates the frogs with such fury he could not eat them.

The prosecutor maintains, however, that shooting frogs is no different than shooting partridges at this season, and Monsieur Dupieux asserts that partridges do not croak by the riverbank. The case has attracted much attention throughout the region.

familiar rooms. She did not launch forth into clothes and hats; she never took a cab unless it was to go to the theater. She ate and drank as sparingly as ever. But for her work, she seemed to be in a state of suspended animation. Thus passed a whole month, and Judy had refused all Gideon's invitations, as well as those of various people quite unknown to her who had suddenly desired her acquaintance. It rather amused her. They were very smart people, some of them. Ladies deluged her with requests to dance for charity. Men of high rank begged her company at supper; but all to no purpose. Judy had placed herself entirely in Mr. Wyon's hands, and his advice was to keep herself entirely to herself. On one occasion Mr. Wyon rather astonished her by asking her a personal question. They were in his rooms at the theater, and she had just shown him a copy of her contract with Matthew Tannary. He pronounced it to be most satisfactory. Then he turned to her with the smile that always made her think of an old lady. "Miss Grant, is Mr. Bruce Gideon, the well-known financier, a friend of yours? Somebody told me he was." "Do you know him?" she asked sharply. "I have met him—yes." "I shouldn't really call him a friend of mine," Judy said, weighing her words; "but he has been very kind to me. He introduced me to dear M. Guaruvenius, you know." "Oh, did he?" "I'm sure I've told you that before, Mr. Wyon." "Oh, yes, Miss Grant, I believe you did mention it. I understand Mr. Gideon is a very remarkable man." "As a matter of fact," she said impulsively, "Mr. Gideon wanted to do just what you've done for me, Mr. Wyon." "Indeed!" "Yes, but M. Guaruvenius offered to bring me out himself." "When he died, didn't Mr. Gideon renew his offer?" "He might have done. I don't know. I didn't give him the chance." "Why was that, Miss Grant?" By the way, I think I might give a little dinner party myself one of these days." When she had gone, and he knew that she was safely in her dressing room, Mr. Wyon rang up Bruce Gideon. "I have done what you asked me to," he said, when Gideon's soft voice answered. "I brought up your name in conversation with the young lady just now." "Yes?" asked Gideon eagerly. "Well?" "She has not the slightest suspicion, I assure you," Mr. Wyon went on. "If she is avoiding you, it is not because of that. She thoroughly believes in my business dealings with her. She told me about your offer to her, and gave me to understand that she looked on it differently—more personally, I suppose." "And here's a little hint — she said that the next time you asked her to dine she would accept, and I must come too," Mr. Wyon laughed discreetly. "But I will be conveniently engaged, or indisposed." He hung up the receiver, with his characteristic smile on his face. Judy, full of her idea of giving a dinner party to all her friends, sought out Chummy the next day. Clarissa was hard at work on a big canvas for an important exhibition. She still looked well, but very tired, and Judy was alarmed by the way she turned to her and said: "Judy, do you know that Alan has returned. Have you seen him? Do you know if it's true that he's been ill?" Judy's heart gave a wild leap, and then seemed to stop still. She did not know what her face expressed. She did not give it a thought. She was so smitten by the idea that Alan was back, and ill—perhaps alone—with nobody to look after him. She did not feel her friend's quiet gaze riveted on her face. She did not know that her secret was written on it plainly for all to see. Perhaps the fact that she had already seen for herself that Chummy knew made her less on her guard. "Who told you?" she asked, finding her voice. "Bastien, last night. He had seen Mr. Hylton—you remember him, Judy, at the studio that night? Mr. Hylton told Bastien that Alan had been ill. I thought perhaps you would have heard." "No — why should I?" asked Judy, in a more tranquil tone than she had ever used to Chummy before. "Why didn't you go and find out?" "Mr. Hylton told Bastien that Alan was already better, and had gone away." "He didn't seem to know." "I didn't know Mr. Steyne was in America," Judy said with elaborate carelessness. "He came back for your first night." "How do you know?" "Michael saw him at the stage door." "I'm sure he didn't!" cried Judy indignantly. "If he was there I never saw him. Chummy, I think you're rather extraordinary! Once before you seemed to think I might have heard from Mr. Steyne. Why should I, any more than you?" "I thought you had been good friends." "But you said you're still friends with him, Chummy." "I know—only it's a little awkward, you see." "I don't see!" Judy spoke almost angrily in her misery. "And I think you're awfully silly not to make it up with him," she added, her loyalty coming to her aid and making her voice quite steady and even careless. "You must be out of your mind, Chummy dear, to think that your old painting comes before Mr. Steyne whom you've loved all these years. In time you will see I'm right!" When Judy's dinner party took place, it was the merriest function that was ever held in Ginori's upstairs room. All Judy's old friends were bidden, and Vincent Stornaway and Bruce Gideon and Mr. Wyon. Dan, who was invited as a guest, insisted on helping the waiters; but he sang his Italian songs later on, and they danced and talked and drank champagne until the night had merged into the next day. Chummy talked a good deal with Bruce Gideon, and naturally all about Judy. She went home and battled with her thoughts. She understood now much that had puzzled her. She understood it since she had found Judy and Alan together, and had discovered that they loved each other. She remembered how strangely Alan had behaved about Judy and Mr. Gideon — how violent he had been, how he had even asked her to warn her friend against the man. At the time she had thought him a little unreasonable. Now she understood that he had been wildly jealous of Gideon. But now, of course, everything would come right in time. Alan would come back, and he and Judy dreamed that Chummy had discovered their secret. Time would do the rest. She had only to play her part. At this point poor Chummy got into bed and cried herself to sleep. (To Be Continued)

In women's hands

IN THE FREEDOM of womens hands is to be read much of the story of this modern way. Hands that press electric buttons, that lift telephone receivers, that turn the pages of newspapers. Hands no longer fettered by the endless household labors of a generation ago.

In womens hands today are the advertisements in the daily paper. They speak to every womans judgment. They appeal to her sense of efficiency. They answer her desire for a life unhampered by needless difficulties and restraints.

By helping her in the intelligent management of her household, advertisements free her hands for direction, for pleasure, for the graces of living. They tell her of products and appliances that lighten her work. They tell her of foods, clothing and equipment that can be advantageously bought. They tell her of countless ways in which she can manage her home more economically and with more success.

In womens hands advertisements are symbols of a new power in a new day. They are eloquent of progress, of comfort, of accomplishment. They serve well. Read them.

Tells How to Take a Real Vacation

NEW YORK.—Millions of Americans will go on automobile trips this summer, thousands will go to the mountains or at the seashore—but only a few will have real vacations. The others will work so hard trying to enjoy themselves that the result in mental and physical refreshment will be no better than if they had stayed at home, stuck to their work and saved their money.

This is the interesting opinion advanced by Hendrik Van Loon, philosopher-historian, in the current issue of a magazine.

The trouble with the average vacation seeker, avers Mr. Van Loon, is that he doesn't change his state of mind when he changes the scene of his daily activities. He continues to be just as much a creature of habit during his two vacation weeks as he has been during the other 50 weeks of the year.

He sets a schedule for himself, if he is traveling, and is as concerned about being at certain points on specified dates as he would be about being at the office on time in the morning. He insists that he should have beds as comfortable, meals as regular and as good as those he has been accustomed to at home. Instead of exercising his curiosity to determine why things are done differently where he is, he is critical because they are not done as they have been done in his own town or his own country.

And the result, opines Mr. Van Loon, is that this type of vacationist works as hard or harder trying to have a good time than he would if he continued in his home town year after year.

"Travel is not a business and never should be a business," he declares. "Did you ever see a man grow hilarious reading a timetable or a guide book?"

Mr. Van Loon's idea of a real vacation, one that will release the mind as well as the body from the monotony of daily habit, is to start out with no particular objective in mind and without caring particularly how much territory you are going to cover or where you are going to spend the night.

A vacation is not intended to be an endurance contest, he points out, nor is it supposed to be a period when your movements are guided by a time table.

"It is really the mental change that counts most, the getting away from day by day habits," he declares in the article. "A mere physical change without a corresponding mental change will do very little good."

The vacationist who starts out on schedule will return "feeling exactly like a package shipped safely by first class mail," he observes. "The one who takes the first turning in the road and does what he pleases when he pleases as he pleases is the one who gets the explorer's thrill and—despite a few probable hardships—returns with his mind refreshed and purged of boredom."

Alla Nazimova, called one of the greatest living actresses, played on show boats in Russia. When she came to America she found herself stranded in an alien land, but learned English in six months and soon rose to fame.

Osages, Deep In Debt, Seek Safety Through Bankruptcy

By G. B. BOSCAL

United Press Staff Correspondent
PAWNIUSKA, Okla., July 16.—The Osage Indians have found the end of the rainbow after traversing a golden lane of oil gushers that have poured millions of dollars into their treasury.

Once known as the richest class of people in the world, they face bankruptcy now.

The playtime of the Osages has ended. Within the past three months the tribe has been undergoing a change—back to the ordinary way of living. Paleface neighbors of the Indians speculate on the outcome of this adjustment. Meanwhile, the Osages are not worried particularly except for the constant pressure of creditors.

Oil spread its greasy mantle of gold over the broad reservation and poured more than $300,000,000 into the tribal purse. The Osages have been soaked in oil, steeped in gin and felt the thrill of power contained in their expensive automobiles.

Many have been the victims of the reign of prosperity which at once released gold grief upon them. Since 1896 when oil prospecting started in the Osage nation, court records show where scores have been killed for their headrights so others might come into possession of the ones that fortune men, headed by W. K. Hale, known as the "King of the Osage" are serving terms in connection with the famous Osage headright murder plot. Murderers of Indians for their headright became so common that Congress finally passed a law providing that any person convicted of killing an Osage should not share the estate.

Unnumberable intermarriage with whites and half-breeds for the purpose of sharing in estates have been effected. The half-bloods and their relatives are the ones that suffer from the present depression. In 1921 the government gave all Osages with less than one-half pure Indian blood the right to sell their surplus lands. The tribal lands. They are the ones who received the moan of the redman across the miles of beautiful tree-clad hills and wrought sadness in the land of the once mighty people.

The Osage still remains a happy go lucky type despite his present poverty. He has been a cheerful spender. The tribe came down from Kansas in 1871 with a $9,000,000 bank account paid by the government for its Kansas hunting ground.

The government bought this reservation and gave them a deed. It cost 70 cents an acre. The Cherokee neighbors, who received $1,000,000 for the land, also received a good cheating deal. The 100,000-acre reservation already has produced a billion dollars in oil and the Osages have spent all but $300,000,000 of their $300,000,000 share. The government still keeps the $30,000,000 trust fund for a few hundred full bloods.

In 1871 the Osages were little better than a tribe of nomads. They were persuaded to organize a tribal government. Until 1896 when oil prospecting began in the Osage, most of these Indians lived in tepees. They lived on government rations and wild game. They held tribal rituals and practiced the war dance. They ate dog meat and whipped their "bad men" at a post. They practiced plural marriage but were not polygamists. The Osages never fought the white man after moving to Oklahoma.

Things moved smoothly until 1896 when E. B. Foster, an oil prospector, came down from the East and negotiated a lease on the entire Osage Nation with Chief Peter Bigheart. The lease was given gratis and proved for $50 a barrel of oil well found and a slight royalty for oil produced.

The lease ran 20 years and Foster and his successors made millions from it. In 1906, after 10 years the Osages had drawn down more than $200,000,000. There were 2229 headrights when the tribal trust closed in 1907. Since then 600 more have been added but 400 of these were not entitled to share in tribal disbursements.

Until 1921 every enrolled Osage drew all money credited to him. The government then reduced payments. Then certificates of "competency" were issued until now there are only about 600 Indians who cannot draw everything that is due them and spend it as they wish.

In flush years the lands yielded $20,000,000 annually. Many families drew $100,000 annually. The bankrupt Indians drew $15,000 each in 1925. Now the unrestricted Indian gets $35 weekly. The full blood gets about $300 monthly.

Now that the Osages have spent more than $225,000,000 and the 9,000 or more oil wells that used to flow from 5,000 to 15,000 barrels daily have settled down to a production of about 100,000 barrels daily, the Indians do not see how they can rise above the quagmire of debt into which they have fallen because of fast living, and 10 years of general carousal.

Fifteen mixed bloods recently applied for bankruptcy and if a decision of the circuit court of appeals is favorable in a case now pending, a tribal attorney has estimated that 1,500 more mixed and full-bloods, who owe between $250 and $15,000 each, will apply for bankruptcy to save their headrights from attachment. Headright is now worth about $10,000. It formerly was worth $50,000.

Featured in Carroll "Vanities" As "World's Most Lovely"

NEW YORK, July.—Broadway's loveliest chorines, among them several national beauty prize winners with "that skin you love to touch" are being exposed this season to more than the eyes of the audience.

For Earl Carroll, in bringing forth his eighth annual edition of the "Vanities," has introduced stage lights which are five times stronger than any previously used in the music shows of the Gay White Way.

Only the most pulchritudinous can pass this glaring and raw-revealing radiance. That you'll find in the line-up such celebrated beauties as Dorothy Britton (Miss Universe of 1929), Irene Ahlberg (Miss America, 1925) and Beryl Wallace.

Strong lights, it has been said, may have a damaging effect to sensitive skins and the daily use of grease paint also must be guarded against.

Wherefore many protective measures are used by the leading producers, and the beauties as well. Each Carroll girl is instructed to use Woodbury's soap before and after performances.

WASHINGTON LETTER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
N.Y. Service Writer

WASHINGTON—"One of the nicest things about being President Hoover lately," says Senator L. Boomhoo McGwhorter, "is the fact that one can pick up the morning newspaper here and right on the front page read Calvin Coolidge's directions for encompassing the return of prosperity."

"There is something very touching about this." One only hopes that Mr. Hoover fully appreciates it. You remember that he got just about the same amount of help from President Coolidge during his presidential campaign as he received from President Monroe and President Millard Fillmore. The way Mr. Coolidge and Mr. Hoover felt toward each other was just too bad.

"Mr. Coolidge's Success

"Cal had done better with Prosperity than any president we ever had. He let Prosperity grow and never let it get away from him. Many of us had become just a little tired of Cal when the time came for him to turn Prosperity over to Herbert. I guess it was because we were all sure that Herbert would accelerate the pace and give us a bigger and better Prosperity than Cal's brand."

"You might have thought that when Herbert furnished the punt and let Prosperity slip from his clutches Cal would have sneered or at least sneered and reckoned that was none of his business, but that would just show that you had misjudged Cal. He has decided that it is up to him to point the way out of the wilderness."

"Nobody ever said that Cal was dumb and so you do not notice him writing out the recipe for recovering Prosperity and sending it to Mr. Hoover by mail, in which way it might get lost before it had passed through the hands of all the White House secretaries."

"Cal just decided to write the recipe in the newspapers where Herbert would never miss it and even if he did it would be called to his attention; Not only that, he was willing to act as sort of a national cheer leader for the Prosperity to pep up the drive for Prosperity which had been sagging for so many months and so he is talking directly to the people and telling them what to do. With the elections coming on, Cal looks very much like the U. S. cavalry dashing up to rescue the paleface maiden from the stake."

"My countrymen, it is time to stop criticizing and quarreling and start sympathizing and helping," said Cal in his first appeal to the nation and did you ever see anyone set a nobler example of sympathy and aid for the stricken as Cal has been extending to Herbert?"

"Cal can speak boldly. He even admits there has been some 'decline' and probably Herbert hasn't never dare admit anything of the kind. He even is willing to confess that the president has been getting blamed for the 'decline' and probably Herbert hasn't thanked him for that, but there is nothing like speaking out frankly and it probably is all for Herbert's own good."

The Coolidge Recipe

"It appears that the Coolidge recipe for coaxing Prosperity back into camp is having faith in ourselves, fasting and prayer, living 'in the things of the spirit,' 'striving mightily for things that are eternal,' sacrifice, buying goods and everybody who has any money paying up his store bills."
