HENRY HELMS LOOSES IN FINAL COURT ACTION

Court Decrees That He Must Die In the 'Chair' For His Part In Cisco Bank Holdup

Rumored That A Petition Asking the Governor to Commute His Death Sentence to Life Imprisonment Is Being Circulated.

Henry Helms, one of the members of the "Santa Claus" bandit gang who held up and robbed the First National bank of Cisco on December 23, 1927, at which time Chief of Police G. E. (Bit) Bedford, Policeman George Carmichael and one of the bandits were killed, and who is under death sentence for his part in the robbery, has lost his fight in the courts, the Court of Criminal Appeals today having refused to permit his filing a second motion for a rehearing.

Helms was tried before Judge George L. Davenport of the 91st court here on a charge of robbery with firearms and was convicted and given the death penalty by the jury. Since that time his case has gone the usual rounds of the courts.

According to a news dispatch from Dallas a petition seeking commutation of Helms' sentence to life imprisonment is being circulated in Eastland county at this time. This information is said to have come from Bert Ashby, attorney for Helms.

No one in the county could be found this morning who would admit they knew anything of such a petition being circulated.

Helms is now in the Dallas county jail.

At Rum War Front in Detroit

Scenes attendant to the big liquor war at Detroit where the government has concentrated one of the strongest prohibition forces in history in an effort to dam the flood of Canadian liquor being smuggled across the border are shown here. At the top, customs agents in a playful moment are squirting confiscated champagne at one another while a large quantity of destroyed liquor is seen in the background. Center, Congressman Robert J. Clancy of the Detroit district is shown conferring with Walter S. Petty (right) acting collector of customs at Detroit. Below, a truck load of assorted liquors is being broken up by agents.

No More Will He Put Bullets In Tobacco Pocket

ALLIANCE, Neb., June 19.—Art Shipley, 55, retired ranchman, has stopped carrying bullets in his pockets. Shipley accidentally mixed a rifle shell with his smoking tobacco. Lighting up for a peaceful smoke, the shell exploded, shattering his pipe bowl and making a hole in his hat. The cartridge was pointed skyward, to which fact Shipley feels he probably owes his life.

BIG MERGER FLOUR MILLS

SHERMAN, June 19.—Negotiations for the merger of eight flour mills in Texas and Oklahoma with the Tex-Okan Flour Mills company were reported completed today giving the combined mills total assets of more than $1,600,000. Concerns reported involved in the transaction include the Fant Milling company, Sherman; the Burrus Mill and Elevator company, Fort Worth; the Morton Milling company, Dallas; the Liberty Mills, San Antonio; and the Job White mill at Custer, Ok. Collins county mill, McKinney and the Burrus Elevators at Dallas and Lubbock.

Important Suit Is Tried in Stephens

BRECKENRIDGE, June 19.—The outcome of Young county's "million dollar" oil suit, which was settled Tuesday afternoon when the 12 jurors decided in favor of the defendants, the Roxanna Petroleum Corporation, Atkinson and Sandefur Oil corporation, et al, was looked upon with great favor today by independent and big operators alike. The suit—H. M. Ford of South Bend vs. Roxanna Petroleum corporation, Atkinson and Sandefur Oil corporation, et al, was based on the lack of development of a 640 acre tract owned by Ford in Young county and the undevelopment of the wells that were drilled. It involved approximately $1,000,000 in its entirety. Oil operators said today if the case had been settled in favor of the plaintiff that many other suits of a like nature would immediately spring up. This is not likely to occur now, the operators believe. According to testimony in the case 19 wells were drilled on the 640 acre lease owned by H. M. Ford. The defendants produced figures to show that a majority of the wells never "paid out" themselves and that approximately 3,252,000 had been lost in drilling and operating the wells that were drilled during the period from 1920 up to date. Some seven or eight wells are now producing on the lease. The plaintiff contended that he was injured to the amount of approximately $1,000,000 due to the undevelopment of his 640 acre lease. This was the second hearing of the case which ended yesterday. A hung jury resulted in the first trial.

Noted Woman Dies; Be Buried Today

DALLAS, June 19.—Mrs. Cora Stuart McKay, 67, daughter of the late Judge William H. Stewart, Galveston, one of the framers of the constitution of Texas Republic, was to be buried here today. She died Monday. Mrs. McKay's father was acting governor of Texas at the inauguration of Sam Houston. He was the son of Prince Joseph of the Scottish house of Stuart, once contenders for the English throne.

HOOVER GETS SUPPORT FOR HIS PROHIBITION POLICIES

WASHINGTON, June 19.—Support came from several quarters to Pres. Hoover today in his effort to make prohibition effective. A delegation of ministers and ruling elders of the Presbyterian church called at the White House and promised loyal support. Mr. Hoover thanked the delegation, appreciating particularly the emphasis laid on voluntary obedience to law rather than on enforcement by compulsion. At the conference of New York state mayors being held at Binghamton, N. Y., Mayor John B. Harris of Watertown announced to the convention that his city was pledged to support prohibition laws in line with the president's request. Mayor Lodge of Detroit said federal authorities have had and will continue to have complete cooperation from Detroit police although he declared lives must not be endangered by prohibition shootings. The Detroit city council today adopted a resolution protesting to Washington against "promiscuous use of firearms by enforcement agents."

Stephens County Farmer Charged Shooting Case

BRECKENRIDGE, June 19.—Charges of assault with intent to murder were on file here today against Herman Thackerson, farmer, following the shooting of Royce Perry, 17, and Miss Laura Johnson, a minister's daughter, earlier in the week. Thackerson was released on $1,000 bond after a hearing before the justice of the peace. The shooting occurred when four young people passed through Thackerson's property after picking peaches in a neighboring orchard. Perry and Miss Johnson are expected to recover.

After hearing evidence in the suit of Dick Penny, Dallas theatrical man, against Will M. Wood et al, involving old Rip, Eastland's famous homed frog, Justice George L. Davenport of the 91st district court announced it would probably be two weeks before a decision would be rendered. ### HOUSE MEMBERS ENGAGE IN WARM PROHIBITION DEBATE

By PAUL R. MALLON, United Press Staff Correspondent. WASHINGTON, June 19.—A warm prohibition debate developed in the Senate today as preparations were being made by both houses to adjourn for the summer by nightfall. After Sen. Royal S. Copeland, Dem., N. Y., had asked senators to prevent the "inexcusable killing of innocent citizens by government officials," Sen. Carter Glass, Dem., Va., and a dry, accused Pres. Hoover, "submerging the prohibition problem." Glass said Hoover had promised to investigate prohibition enforcement but had not mentioned prohibition when he gave instructions to his law enforcement commission. "Who ever heard anything about enforcing the laws against highway robbery during the campaign?" Glass asked. "Who ever heard anything about enforcing any law but prohibition? But now when we are to have an investigation of law enforcement, we do not even hear the word prohibition." Copeland referred to the prohibition killings on the border of his state of "inexcusable disasters" and "an outrageous thing."

Senate Changes 140 Year Custom

Secret Executive Sessions to Be Discontinued Except in Rare Cases.

WASHINGTON, June 19.—After 140 years of secret executive sessions, the senate entered today upon a new rule providing for the consideration of presidential nominations and treaties with foreign countries in the open. A rule expressing this change of policy and providing a formula for working it out was adopted late yesterday by a vote of 65 to 5. It will have its first application late today when, just before the senate starts on a two months recess, it will confirm recent nominations sent to it by President Hoover. The new rule, framed by Senator Robinson of Arkansas, demoted the floor leader, provided all executive business shall be considered in open session, unless a single senator objects. If seconded, his objection automatically will close the doors of the senate and the senate will vote as to whether it should keep the doors closed. A majority can decide the issue in any case, and any senator will be privileged to say how he voted. Friends of the publicity movement say it will prevent secret sessions except in rare cases.

FLASHES

DURANT, Okla., June 19.—Evasion of the Texas "big marriage law," making it mandatory for those contemplating marriage to post three days notice, is being effected by crossing the Oklahoma boundary, according to increases in the marriage license business here. Of the 11 marriage licenses issued by L. W. Hughes, court clerk, over the week end, eight were sold to Texas couples. Three of the couples were from Dallas and two were from Fort Worth. Thirty-one licenses have been issued here since June 1.

It cost him $512 for food and hotel bills en route, Lavaux said. "I walked all the way and did not accept any rides," the traveler said.

BERLIN, June 19.—Unconfirmed reports from Constantinople to the Telegram union today stated that Leon Trotsky, exiled Soviet chieftan, would seek through the American Federation of Labor to gain entry to the United States. Hot Shots of Politics by Col. Hugh Nugent Fitzgerald. Where Trial Judges Are Barred. Sen. Walter Woodward is author of a bill which provides that trial judges would be disqualified from sitting in cases where relatives are contestants. It is said the measure was drafted and enacted to replace a law which codifiers left off the statute books in 1925 when Texas laws were re-arranged. Codifiers appear to make many mistakes. They are unlike the members of a certain church—"without spot or blemish when they approach the perfect state of mind."

State Board of Education. Gov. Moody signed the state board of education bill. It abolishes the state textbook commission and places with the board of education the power of making textbook adoptions. It authorizes the board to appoint a commission of five to consider textbooks and make recommendations, but the commission has no power to make awards or of adoptions. It is a queer bill. In the caption it provides for the appointment of a state superintendent of public instruction to be the body of the measure makes no reference to the matter, it is at least a step forward. If there is tinkering to be done to sound out a law, lawmakers of the future may be able to remedy the defects.

Another Money Saving Veto. Texas lawmakers enacted a bill providing for increase in salaries of official court reporters from $1,100 a year to a maximum of $1,600. Gov. Moody vetoed the measure. He figured that it became a law the expense to taxpayers for payment of court reporters would be between $70,000 and $80,000 annually. This may please the taxpayers but it will fill the court reporters with disgust.

There except for a brief stay in Pittsburgh, Pa., she grew to womanhood, and in the schools of Woodfield and Pittsburgh was educated. It was here also that she made confession of faith in Christ and united first with the church. At Sapulpa, Okla., she was wedded on January 3, 1913 to Vernon W. Hart. There and at Drumright, Okla., she and her husband resided until 1918, when they came to Eastland. For two years Eastland was their home, and then Mr. Hart returned to Woodfield and engaged in business, where the family resided until in 1924 they returned to Eastland where they have since made their home. During their last residence in Ohio, Mrs. Hart became a member of the Order of Eastern Star. In this order she served with great honor to herself and her fellow members both in Woodfield and Eastland, until stricken in health two years ago, when she was obliged to relinquish her activities and give thought to the care of her health. Upon coming to Eastland, Mrs. Hart became a member of the First Presbyterian church. She was a useful and beloved member of the Bethany Sunday school class and of the woman's auxiliary, and will be missed from these circles and from the membership of the church. If that fails, the fight for it will be abandoned at this session, he said.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

"I've often wondered myself," Willis Todd answered gruffly. "Just selfish, suppose. I wanted you to be as crazy in love with me as I am with you. It never happens that way, I suppose. One always loves more than the other. Morgan and his Iris—sorry, honey!—you and I—you and Morgan! Heh-ho, darling! It's a great life—if you don't weaken. And I've weakened—so have you!"

"Will you try it with me now, Nan? I'm licked. I'll take what I can get and be thankful for that. Maybe it's better to be privileged to devote your life to the person you love than to be a hog about romance, which doesn't wear any too well if the cynical young poets are to be believed, as well as the evidence of our own eyes."

Nan giggled through a sob. "That sentence is becoming terribly involved, dear, and so is the sentiment! But—I know what you mean. You ARE a darling, Willis!"

"Then—will you?" "I want to, Willis," Nan confessed miserably. "I want to with all my common sense and all my weak feminine yearnings to be protected and pampered. But—it's too late now, Willis, dear. All my heart's gone clear out of my body to another man and his child. They do need me so and I'm not unhappy—all the time. In fact," and she sat up determinedly and dabbed away her tears, "I'm so happy most of the time that I'm in mortal terror that something will happen to take what I have away from me."

The next morning, after more sleep than she had hoped to get, Nan Carroll took up her temporarily neglected duties in Morgan's office. It was good to have to work like a whirlwind, nice to be teased by Evans and Blake about her prospective status as a "flapper lawyer."

"You'll have to grow a new crop of hair and straddle that babyish nose of yours with a black-ribboned prince nez," Blake told her. Even grumpy old Evans had his jokes, addressing her ponderously as "Attorney Carroll."

It was into this genial atmosphere of work and jest that John Curtis Morgan stepped at 10 o'clock, accompanied by old Judge Jennifer, retired from the bench these 20 years but still practicing law. Morgan, who was only 36, in spite of his eminence in the profession, had begun his career as a very humble clerk in Judge Jennifer's offices 15 years before and the two were more like father and son than anything else.

It was not often, however, that the old man honored the younger with a visit to his offices, and somehow Nan received the impression, after a quick glance at her employer's face, that this was not a visit at all, but a professional consultation. And yet—there was no case in Morgan's office at the time that seemed to call for Judge Jennifer's well-seasoned advice. In fact, the old man, grown weary of criminal law, had been devoting himself almost exclusively for several years to the less objectionable types of divorce suits, and the conference—if such it was—lasted until almost noon. Oddly enough, Morgan did not accompany his old friend to the door, did not, in fact, emerge from his private office. Judge Jennifer came out alone and stopped before Nan's desk.

"Well, well, Nan, my child," he rumbled, with grandfatherly affection, "John tells me you're going to be a lawyer. He's up to the capital to take your bar examinations. You're a smart girl, Nan, and we're proud of you, but—" and he lowered the rumble to a gusty, strangely significant whisper—"take an old man's advice and leave these dirty criminal cases to the men. Marry a lawyer, raise up a boy to be a lawyer, if you've got to meddle with the law, but—leave the courtroom fights to the men, my child. You find me a nice young lawyer for a husband, Judge Jennifer, and maybe I'll take your advice," Nan retorted flippantly, but she had an uneasy suspicion that Judge Jennifer knew exactly what her hot blush meant.

"That's a bargain—remember!" the old lawyer chuckled from the doorway. For nearly an hour there was no sound from the private office of John Curtis Morgan. Nan forced herself to go on working at high pressure, but three times she made typographical errors in letters she was writing—an inefficiency record she had never sunk to before.

Something was afoot. . . Judge Jennifer—divorce. . . Light poured in. Iris, of course! She had written to Judge Jennifer, as HER attorney, had asked him to approach her husband on the subject of a divorce. Of course! Oh, subject man! Yesterday's accident, which might easily have been fatal, today this new blow, killing the last stubborn blow the deserted husband had clung to. . . For six months she had fought to give him peace and to help him banish the devils of despair which had taken possession of him when Iris had left him. Now the battle would have to be fought all over again.

FRECKLES AND HIS FRIENDS

with me? I—want to talk with you," Morgan said, not looking up as if he were unable to meet her eyes.

They had never lunched together "socially" before, not even since Nan had worked herself into the curious post of long-distance housekeeper of his home, and as she walked beside Morgan into the big, rather magnificent dining room of the Traylor Hotel, Nan felt ridiculously self-conscious.

Morgan tried, rather awkwardly, to make an occasion of their lunch in the matter of food, but Nan chose a single dish and firmly refused everything else.

Nan knew that he expected his news to be upsetting, for he conscientiously gave her plenty of time to eat before plunging into whatever it was that he had to tell her.

When he did begin it was abruptly, even harshly: "I'm going to apply for a divorce, Nan." As badly as that!

Nan felt for a moment as if she were on the deck of a tossing ship. Her hand groped for her water glass, found it, brought it so jerkily to her lips that a little of the water spilled on the cloth. Thoughts hurtled and clashed through her mind. . . . Not Iris who wanted a divorce! It was HE! Why? What did it mean? . . . She could not speak.

"Judge Jennifer assures me that it can be—done very quietly, very easily," Morgan went on in a strained, harsh monotone. "The letter, you know. He still could not bring himself to utter Iris' name. "And—desertion. It has been six months—all that our divorce laws require under the circumstances. The letter makes it—easy. I never thought—" His voice broke, then he cleared his throat sternly and went on: "But the petition can be heard—" in chambers—no publicity at all, of course. My—she will be served by publication, since I don't know where she is. It should all be over in a month, Judge Jennifer says. Over . . . he repeated.

ing his best to look as solemn as the occasion demanded.

"Is he going to say, 'No, no! It's all a mistake! I've already got a wife, from whom no court in the land can divorce me! I promised to love and cherish HER until death do us part. I can't make the same promise to another woman?" The thought zigzagged like lightning through Nan Carroll's mind as she held her breath for the few seconds that seemed like an eternity before the answer came, in deep, vibrating tones:

"I do!" Was the answer more emphatic because he had hesitated those few seconds? But the justice of the peace was going on, his merry blue eyes which could not look solemn, twinkling upon the pale-faced, brown-eyed little girl whose head did not quite reach the shoulder of the man she was marrying.

"Nancy Stair Carroll, do you take this man—?" Nan appeared to be listening intently, but a roar as of rushing waters filled her ears. Her brown eyes, fixed in a trance-like stare upon Justice Doheny's face, became aware at last that the humorously puckered old lips were no longer speaking, that the justice of the peace, with cocked head and quizzically raised eyebrows, was awaiting her answer. She felt a slight movement of the man who stood so close beside her. Suddenly realization swept over her.

"Yes, I do!" she gasped, and was surprised that the words emerged from her cold, stiff lips as little more than a tremulous whisper.

Above the rushing of mighty waters the girl heard the faint, faraway voice of the comical old justice of the peace: "Join right hands—" Because she was still staring fixedly at the justice, Nan's right hand wavered blindly, until it was enfolded, almost crushed. . . . "How thin his fingers are!" Nan thought, as she closed her eyes for a moment and let her body sway dizzily. "I must fatten him somehow. He works too hard—" It did not occur to her then or afterward that it was odd that her only conscious thought as the ceremony was being concluded was for the man who was becoming her husband. She had always thought of him first.

"I pronounce you man and wife." It was not until those words had been spoken that Nan wrenched her eyes from the merry, fat face of the justice and forced them to look up into the face of the man she had married. To her amazement, John Curtis Morgan was smiling. An answering smile began to flicker over her own pale face before she discovered that this was only a ghastly imitation of a smile which could do no more than spread his mouth, and left untouched his deep-set black eyes, in which there was such tragic pain that the girl involuntarily shrank from him.

future." But Nan lifted her head gallantly, smiled up at him brightly, through a sudden mist of tears. He mustn't know she was hurt. Hadn't she known that, things being as they were, every day, almost every hour must bring its hurts? And hadn't she elected to be hurt rather than not to have him at all?

"Thank you, Mr. Morgan. I—" she began. A corner of the broad mouth twitched and drew down in the quizzical smile she loved and watched for. "Something drastic's got to be done about this 'Mr. Morgan' nonsense," he told her with mock severity, while the fond light deepened and glowed in his black eyes.

Nan laughed, shakily. How gallantly he was trying to play up! She mustn't fail him now. "You've been my boss so long it doesn't seem possible to call you—John. I'd feel frightfully impertinent." Her husband chuckled and the familiar sound was rich with genuine amusement. "Then we'll pretend I'm still your boss and that you'll be discharged without a recommendation if I catch you calling me 'Mr. Morgan' again."

If the ghost of a wife who was not dead had not been hovering over them, Nan would have retorted gaily: "I promised to love, honor and OBEY, didn't I?" As it was, she answered with exaggerated meekness: "Yes, sir—I mean, yes—John."

"That's better! I can see you're going to be a—to be very docile." "He can't bring himself to use the word," Nan's heart waited forlornly, but she was grinning at him with her gamine-like cheerfulness, as she stepped into his car—THEIR car now! It was a new one. Iris had never sat by his side on these taupe velvet cushions.

Piled in the tonneau were their bags, packed for the brief honeymoon which Morgan had insisted upon. Curtis, now seven years old, was to be left in the motherly care of Maude O'Brien. The new school term had started on Monday. Little Pat and Curtis were still the closet of friends, the younger child glorying in being bossed by the older one, apparently not at all disturbed by the fact that his hero was only the cook's son.

"Why, you're going to the office!" Nan came to herself with a start, as the car turned down the familiar block on which the San derson Building was located. (To Be Continued)

 Tallies were in diamonds and spades. At close of the game, a corsage of sweet peas, fashioned of colored milled candies, in gauze covers, were plate favors.
 Bridge was played at two tables very attractive in their crisp coverings, and favor for high score, a powder puff, was awarded Jane Rotramel.

 The party was a real surprise, and arranged by Mrs. Collie, with the assistance of Mrs. T. J. Haley, Mrs. Grady Pipkin, Mrs. H. O. Tatum, and Mrs. Airy Bendy, who received with the hostess, until all the men assembled, when it became in verity a stag party.

 Court of Criminal Appeals.
 AUSTIN, June 19.—A new trial was ordered for Mrs. Rosa Waybourn today by the court of criminal appeals. Mrs. Waybourn had been given a 45-year verdict in her husband's slaying, on a charge of being an accomplice to the killing of her husband, W. W. Waybourn of Smithville.
 Waybourn's body, badly beaten, was found in their home while Mrs. Waybourn was away on a visit. At her trial Hujo Middleton, Smithville, Blacksmith, testified that he had hired a Mexican to kill Waybourn.

CONVENTION TO BE HELD IN SUMMER
New Law Will Be Principal Topic for Discussion
 CISCO, Texas, June 19.—Cisco was selected by the Heart of Texas Mutual Insurance Secretaries' association for its next convention, the meeting to be subject to the call of President W. N. Ellis, of Brady, Brady and Brownwood were competitors of Cisco, this session which will be held sometime between now and August 15.
 The last convention was held at Brady and ended Thursday.
 Cisco was chosen by the Secretaries due to the efforts of C. R. West, W. F. Evans and Joel Kincaannon, secretaries of the local mutuals. The rare advantages for convention visitors and the attractions at Lake Cisco were inducements that impelled the insurance men to pass up other cities for the location of their next meeting.
 The gathering will bring between 35 and 40 visitors to this city. These men will come from a territory that extends from Mason to Lubbock and from Fort Worth west.
 At the meeting here the association will consider the new law passed by the present legislature to govern the operation of mutuals.
