Resident Relief Cases Decrease In Texas In April

AUEYIN—Resident relief cases decreased by 25,848 in April and the total number of persons receiving resident relief fell below the 1,000,000 mark for the first time in many months. It has been announced by Adam R. Johnson, state relief director.

Cases receiving resident relief dropped from 253,890 in March to 228,042 in April. Part of the decrease was attributable to transfer of farm families from the resident relief to rural rehabilitation rolls, the latter showing an increase of 6,822 cases in April and a total of 18,441 as against 11,819 in March.

Transient cases also declined from 22,581 in March to 22,523 in April. For all programs, including emergency education and student aid, the decline was from 305,502 cases in March to 252,575 cases in April, a net decline of 22,927 cases.

The Texas Relief commission in April incurred obligations amounting to $5,671,884.55, compared with $5,948,329.96 in March. Of this total relief cost, $3,164,111.42 went to the 228,042 resident cases, representing 927,840 of the state's residents, an average of $13.88 per case.

Those who worked out all aid they received numbered 86,976 cases; 92,810 were provided only with direct relief; 48,256 worked for a part of the aid extended and received the remainder in the form of direct relief.

Further relief was extended through special programs as follows: Emergency education, 2,681 cases; expenditure, $130,790.57; per case, $48.78. College student aid, 4,588 cases; expenditure, $64,094.18; per case, $26.7.

Transient aid, 25,823 cases, expenditure, $77,083.49; per case, $2.97. Rural rehabilitation, 18,441 cases; expenditure, $1,153,978.22; per case, $62.85.

Administration costs for April included $400,361.13 for non-relief salaries and $124,726.56 for other obligations, a total of $525,077.69, or 8.44 per cent of the total costs. Salaries paid to budgetary workers on administrative projects and included in obligations for work relief amounted to $264,311.61.

Project supervision, including non-relief salaries, materials, rentals and services, cost $408,402.55. The Relief Commission also paid $64,550.43 for materials for production; $54,806.85 for containers for production; and $9,991.17 for processing commodities in commercial plants.

TIPS on Contract

Ruff With Long Trumps By TOM O'NEIL. Some situations require use of the trumps of the hand that is long in them for ruffing purposes. In other words, the declarer's partner is made the master hand. Take this situation: DECLARER S-Q PARTNER S-A 4 2 H-Q 10 9 8 2 H-K 7 6 5 D-A 10 7 3 D-4

The contract is six hearts, doubled on the declarer's left. How would you make the slam if the king of spades were led? In order to have any hope of success the double must be based on possession of the protected ace-king of hearts. The declarer must lose a trick to the ace of trumps. Presumably the jack of trumps can be captured by finesse. There are three losing clubs. Should they all be ruffed or should one be ruffed and two discarded on diamonds?

Immediate exhaustion of adverse trumps will leave no trumps with which to ruff clubs, especially if the doubler has all four adverse trumps. To get discards on diamonds, adverse trumps must be first exhausted. If the diamonds break, only two of the three losing clubs can be discarded on them. Henry Enoch, the master of Bridge House, New York, found a way to make the slam. This was the complete hand:

WEST: ♠K 9 8 ♠9 3 ♠A 10 6 3 2 ♠7 5 3 SOUTH: ♠Q 10 ♠10 7 5 ♠A 10 6 3 2 ♠Q 10 8 6 2 EAST: ♠A 2 ♠K 6 ♠K 4 ♠K 4

The bidding was: SOUTH WEST NORTH EAST P P 1D 1S 2H 2S 3H 4C 4H 4S 6H P P DEL. East's overall of North's diamond with a spade instead of two clubs was due to desire to show length in a major at the range of one. Having the other major and a fit with the opening bidder's diamonds, South was moved to some free bids, which prompted North's soar to slam.

After taking the king of spades with the ace North, the declarer led a low heart to South's queen, which was taken by the ace West. A club was returned, South winning with the ace. The ten of hearts was finessed, followed by the finesse of the seven-spot. A spade from the North hand was ruffed South. Success now depended upon West's possession of three diamonds. The king of diamonds was played, followed by the lead of the low diamond to the ace. The last spade from the North hand was trumped South. The declarer's own hand now was out of trumps. West had the lone jack and North the lone king.

The jack of diamonds was led and taken with the queen. The king of hearts dropped West's jack. The last two tricks were won with diamonds North. Nice timing, Henry!

Patman Believer In Trying Again

By WILLIAM S. WHITE WASHINGTON, D.C.—The man whose name is almost a synonym for the word "bonus," apple-cheeked Rep. Wright Patman, is a living disciple of the old copybook homily. "If at first you don't succeed, try, try again."

The Texan—no less than the issue itself—has come a long way since 1929 when first he began clearing nationally for immediate payment of the adjusted service certificates. In those crowded years the man himself has changed little and his quite unpretentious technique not at all.

Six years ago he started the fight by putting in a bill providing for payment, and simply hanging on grimly. That has been the basis of the formula ever since, a waiting game played by a man who learned right away how to wait.

First Success in 1931 In 1931 the Patman bill allowing veterans to borrow on their certificates actually got by; but in 1932 and again in 1934 victory for full payment, though easy in the house was not to be had because of senate and white house opposition.

Long ago Patman bills began to take the label of "HR 1" meaning they were the first introduced in the house each session.

Their stout, unsmiling author became accustomed early to deflections in his own camp, to disagreement among veterans themselves over policies and plans. He invariably followed the custom of looking over both sides and quietly selecting the scheme he believed lost. Whatever the decision, it was final. Patman's long-used method has been to work with a minimum of display and a maximum of system. His plan has been to use the best available key men for every available phase of the campaign.

The leader himself doesn't run long on oratory as an art of persuasion. His bonus speeches are not particularly distinguished as speeches but primarily serious affairs though rarely bitter. He has a good many friends on the other side because he never transgresses the unwritten rules of parliamentary conduct.

Politely Fugacious Essentially a man with a single interest—the bonus—he never departs for long from that subject. But, as a former district attorney, a zealous and crusading prosecutor, he sometimes turns his attention for the moment to some other subject and blazes away at some situation he doesn't like, or some individual he suspects.

Mild looking and soft voiced, he is politically highly pugacious, although the casual observer wouldn't suspect it. He has little "color" in the political sense of that term, has no hobbies, makes no social pretensions and lives the quiet life of a family man, sticks rather closely to his office—and his knitting.

Patman's long-used method has been to work with a minimum of display and a maximum of system. His plan has been to use the best available key men for every available phase of the campaign.

PROTECT YOUR LIFE AND THE LIVES OF OTHERS!

There are three questions you should ask yourself about the tires you buy:

- 1—"Will the non-skid tread give me the greatest traction and protection against skidding?"
- 2—"Are they built to give me the greatest blowout protection?"
- 3—"Without sacrificing these two important safety features will they give me longer mileage, thus making them the most economical tires I can buy?"

Answer No. 1—Harvey S. Firestone early realized the value of tire traction and safety and was the first to design an All Rubber Non-Skid Tire. Through the years Firestone has led the way in the design and development of tires with most effective non-skid treads.

Firestone does not depend solely on traction and non-skid tests made by its own engineers—it employs a leading University to make impartial tests for non-skid efficiency of its tires, and their most recent report shows that Firestone High Speed Tires stop the car 15% quicker than the best of all popular makes of tires.

Answer No. 2—Blowout protection must be built into a tire. Friction and heat within the tire is the greatest cause of blowouts. Firestone protects its tires from friction and heat by a patented process which soaks every cord and insulates every strand with pure liquid rubber. This is an additional process known as Gum-Dipping, by which every 100 pounds of cotton cords absorb eight pounds of rubber. This extra process costs more and is not used in any other make of tire.

Leading race drivers investigate the inbuilt qualities of the tires they use, because their very lives depend upon their tires, and they always select Firestone Tires for their daring speed runs. In fact, Firestone Tires have been on the winning cars in the gruelling Indianapolis 500-mile race for fifteen consecutive years, and they were on the 5,000-pound car that Ab Jenkins drove 3,000 miles in 23½ hours on the hot salt beds at Lake Bonneville, Utah, at an average speed of 127.2 miles per hour, without tire trouble of any kind. These amazing performance records are proof of the greatest blowout protection ever known.

Answer No. 3—Thousands of car owners reporting mileage records of 40,000 to 75,000 miles, is proof of the long mileage and greater economy by equipping with Firestone High Speed Tires. Let these unequalled performance records be your buying guide.

Go to the Firestone Auto Supply and Service Store or Firestone Tire Dealer and let him equip your car with Firestone Tires, the safest and most economical tires built.

ENEMY'S KISS

Chapter Nine GAFFE AGAIN

"But if father's just taken the house?" asked Alison.

"Down here in the country?" Guy laughed. "Good Lord, yes! Every one'd know they're frightfully inquisitive in all these little places. No, I've another idea. There may be two Warleys. Croft House isn't an uncommon name, you know."

"The telegram I got said Warley, Snaxer," insisted Alison.

"Even then there are three Woodfords and several Stokes in England—the foreign telegraph office may've got the county wrong."

"They might do that," admitted Alison. "It certainly sounds more likely."

"I don't want to hurry you," he looked at Alison's emptying plate, "but if we've both made a mistake, the sooner we're out of this the better. We don't want anybody to turn up."

"I'm done," Alison hurriedly drank her tea and finished a bit of toast. "Halt past nine! I'd no idea it was so late."

"I didn't want to wake you. You were so dead tired. If you're really done, I'll go and start the car."

"What about all this?" Alison looked doubtfully at the remains of the meal.

"I shouldn't worry," he advised. "I'll afford to be found here. And they'll find a new teapot and keys in return for washing up."

She laughed. "All right. I'll run and get my luggage if you'll start the car. Can you run me into Warley?"

"I thought if you'd care to I could run you up to London. You did say 'I'll be home in a week'—but now he certainly avoided Alison's eyes."

"You're sure it's not too much trouble?" Her own voice was studiously careless; she did not look at him.

"Not a bit. Good! I'll go and start the car."

Not a single word that any third person could object to, yet Alison stood rather still while his light, quick footsteps went down the long passage to the hall. She felt most unreasonably glad that he had asked if he might take her up to London and her eyes had a starry light in them as they rested on Gaffe.

After all, if there had been anything funny, would he deliberately choose to take her to her father's house? So easy to part at the station, so easy to leave things there.

There was a small, demure smile on Alison's lips as she went up the stairs to collect her suitcase.

"Ready? Let me have this. Is this all?" He took the case from her hands.

"That and my trunk in the porch. I'll just see I've left nothing about."

Yet as she ran back through the house, Alison was not looking for any possession; she wanted to imprint freshly on her mind the picture of that house. To glance by daylight at the pantry where they had met in such a queer fashion, to peep into the drawing room where the desk stood with its broken drawers half open; to run back into the kitchen where they had sat at breakfast, seeing him again smiling at her with the frying pan in his hand.

She did not admit it to herself, made excuses even in her own mind.

"I'll just see that all the lights are off."

With Gaffe at her heels, she went down the seven stone steps that led to the cellar; how grimly it had felt last night, with the stable lantern casting its dull yellowish beam down those steps!

Turning the key, she peeped in and saw all the lights inside were still on, blazing, but the cellar held no horror for her now. She ran through and turned the main switch down, half ashamed of her own terror, and lost in the picture of the two of them exploring.

She was on her way back when a low, unpleasant growl behind her made her stop.

"Gaffe! Come on, Gaffe!"

The big dog did not answer. He was standing a few feet away staring intently back into the darkness, all four feet rigid, tail bristling, ears pricked and teeth bared.

"Gaffe!" Alison stamped her foot.

The dog looked back at her but did not relax and as he turned back to the cellar she could see the hair along his back rising stiffly as though there were some enemy, invisible, in the darkness beyond.

In spite of herself, a sense of something creepy, terrible, hidden there, returned; she ran forward and caught at the dog's collar, hugging it to him, but he was heavy and he would not move, resisting her with all his weight.

"It's a rat," Alison told herself, remembering the one which had run from the linoleum last night. But a dog chases rats, sniffs at them; he does not stand rigidly glaring and growling.

"Gaffe, come on!" A sudden spasm of fear shook Alison as she, too, stared with straining eyes into the dark; was it imagination, or was there something pale over there, behind the fall of linoleum in the far recess?

Her hand tightened on the bulldog's collar. Suddenly he wrenched free, raced past her and away up the cellar steps, with Alison peeing behind. She slammed the door to, turned the key and fled breathlessly to find herself charging straight into Guy Westura.

"Where on earth have you been? I've been hunting for you everywhere." He seemed upset, was staring down at her frowning. "Good Lord, you're white as a sheet! What's happened?"

Gaffe was leaping up at him, nuzzling his hand; Alison, ashamed now of her fear and rather hurt at his brusque words, said shortly, "Nothing. I went down to turn the lights off and Gaffe wouldn't come back."

"We ought to be getting on. There'll be people about if we wait much longer," he said. "Look here, would you like to stop and telephone to your father?"

"If it wouldn't take too long?"

The car was a small and rather ancient two-seater, painted dark blue and with Alison's luggage stowed in the rumble there was no room for Gaffe.

"Sorry! This is a bachelor car. Gaffe and I generally travel alone. Can you manage him like that?"

The bulldog was heavy but Alison one arm round him, said cheerfully "Good Heavens, yes."

Gaffe's owner, she noticed, drove well; fast but with a sure touch that gave her confidence at once.

"You drive a lot?" she guessed as they ran down the road up which she had come in the hired car last night; seen by daylight a gray road winding between chalk pits and the high rounded downs.

"Yes. One has to in my job." He took the big swinging curve with beautiful precision as the needle mounted.

"What? Oh! Yes. . . . For a moment he seemed confused. "Yes, I get about the country a good deal."

"I don't think I've ever met an architect," said Alison naively. "Is it an amusing job?"

"Sometimes."

"What kind of things do you build—I mean mostly?"

"Oh, houses and schools and things," he answered vaguely. "I say, that looks like the main road down there."

But Alison was gazing back at the house they had left, tucked in its hollow in the downs.

"I'm horribly ignorant about architecture," she confessed. "I know that was an old house, of course, but I've not a notion what period it belongs to."

He did not seem at all anxious to talk shop, for her answered unenthusiastically "Yes—it was old all right."

"What was it? Queen Anne?" she asked.

"Tudor." She looked at him in some surprise. "I thought all Tudor houses were L shaped and had diamond windows."

"Oh! Yes. But not in this part of the world." He braked rather sharply. "I say, can you look out for an AA box? We ought to get on the telephone. Your father may be worrying."

But the road, good as the surface was, was not even second class; it ran now between wide wheatfields, the rough stubble gleaming faintly with the autumn frost, now branching out and up over the sweep of the down without even a sign of farm or village.

"I'm not too sure which is the nearest box," he admitted.

"I suppose so. An architect has to rush about looking at places," agreed Alison.

NEW YORK
By JAMES McMOLLAN

Bargain
Secretary Roper's Business Advisory Council isn't the only group which feels it has been given the works in Washington. The American Bankers Assn., nurses a similar grievance.

"Several months ago leading members of the association had a private conference with Federal Reserve Governor Marriner Eccles in Texas. It was all very unofficial but New York insiders say a definite understanding was reached. The ABA agreed to sort out its opposition to Title II of the banking bill—and specifically not to object to an open market committee (controlling the purchase and sale of federal securities by the Reserve bank) dominated by the Federal Reserve Board.

In return Eccles was supposed to engineer acceptance of amendments by the administration which would remove the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency from the Federal Reserve Board and would give four votes out of nine on the proposed open market committee to governors of regional Reserve banks. The bill as it stands allows the regional banks merely to advise—not to vote.

fix a "fair value" on his property. If agreement is reached on the appraisal, the farmer then may petition for a spread of his indebtedness over a period of six years, on an upward sliding scale of interest from 1 to 5 per cent. However, complete agreement of creditors must be obtained before such procedure can be instituted.

In the absence of any objections, the federal court may grant the farmer a five-year moratorium during which time the farmer must maintain the property and pay a fair rental, the latter to be determined by the court and divided among his creditors.

The five-year period up, a new appraisal of the property would be in order. If acceptable to creditors, and paid off, regardless of the original mortgage obligation, the farmer would have relief in that manner. If not, the farmer ultimately could resort to foreclosure or bankruptcy.

The act was first attacked by the Louisville Joint Stock Land Bank in federal court at Louisville in an action seeking permission to foreclose against William H. Radford, the Christian county farmer who sought bankruptcy proceedings. The court questioned its constitutionality, but upheld it. This decision was appealed to the U. S. circuit court of appeals, Cincinnati, which upheld it. The case then went to the U. S. supreme court.

Fate of the act in other courts, chronologically:

Federal Judge W. Calvin Chestnut, at Baltimore, declared it unconstitutional on grounds it violates the rights of creditors and seeks to supersede rights of state courts. His decision was reversed by the Circuit court of appeals at Richmond.

U. S. Judges Charles G. Briggie and J. Earl Major at Peoria, Ill., held in a similar action that the Frazier-Lemke act does not give debtors the right to ignore their obligations.

U. S. Judge John C. Pollock, of Kansas City, held the act unconstitutional in the case of J. W. Sinclair, Hiawatha, Kan., farmer vs. the Farm Mortgage company, under petition to dismiss was upheld.

U. S. Judge Luther E. Way, Norfolk, Va., held the act unconstitutional on the grounds it deprives persons of property without due process of law.

U. S. District Judge Fred M. Raymond, Grand Rapids, Mich., upheld its constitutionality, throwing out the argument about "due process of law."

U. S. Judges John E. Martineau and Heartwell Ragon, Little Rock, Ark., upheld its constitutionality and ordered a decree to prevent sale of a farmer's property by foreclosure.

U. S. Judge Walter C. Lindley, Danville, Ill., upheld its constitutionality, throwing out the argument of the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance company that it was an impaired secured creditor.

in the case of Charles H. Miner, Trique county farmer.

William Burg Asselin, U. S. Conciliation Commissioner, argued at York, Pa., that the act be declared unconstitutional after dismissing an order restraining a sheriff's sale of a farm. He upheld contention of a creditor that the act deprived him of property without due process of law.

U. S. Judge Merrill E. Otis, Kansas City, on March 14, 1933, held the act a "valid exercise of congressional power, although unwieldy in many of its provisions and almost incomprehensible in others." His decision came in the case of Harry C. Jones, Tarkio, Mo., who sought relief under the act only to be challenged by a secured creditor.

Overstepped
The bankers aren't hating any open charges of a double cross. That wouldn't be wise—because they'll be pretty much at Mr. Eccles' mercy if the bill passes. But privately they claim they lived up to their end of the swap and Eccles didn't.

That's why the ABA has been so unexpectedly calm and gentle in its attitude towards the bill until recently. Their tune changed only when it became certain that the promised amendments were not coming through—and their present vehemence is in proportion to their disillusion.

The best posted sources exonerate Eccles personally from the imputation of bad faith. They figure he overstepped his authority in offering such an agreement—but didn't know it until later.

Alone
New York sharps prophesy that Father Coughlin will come a heavy cropper on the Nye-Sweeney banking bill. His assumption that the administration will swallow it because Secretary Morgenthau said he favored an independent monetary authority won't be justified. The Radio Priest has announced that congressional hearings will be held on his bill—but that isn't up to him. It's up to Senator Fletcher and Congressman Steagall. Neither of them is likely to confuse an already complicated situation still more just to make Coughlin happy.

When the Eccles bill first came up several of Father Coughlin's closest advisers urged him to support it as a practical step towards his objective. They told him it would be politically impossible to go beyond it at present. But Coughlin wouldn't listen and came out for his bridge by attacking the Eccles bill as a "bankers measure" (you wouldn't think it was if you could hear the bankers talk). That makes it impossible for him to retrace his steps and get aboard the winning wagon now.

Astute observers remark that this is the first issue he is making a fight on which hadn't already been extensively popularized (by other sources besides himself) before it came to a test. This was true of devaluation, of the silver policy, of opposition to the World Court and of the Patman bonus bill. For once he stands virtually alone—and it will make quite a difference. The Nye-Sweeney bill won't get to first base—but a lot of financial conservatives hope Coughlin does succeed in promoting a congressional argument about it. They figure that would vastly improve the chances of killing the objectionable Title II in the Eccles bill.

Biggs
How to get rid of an influential subordinate is a hard problem for private industry. It's even more difficult for an administration which must always think in terms of politics. Some do it crudely and thereby stir up trouble. But the Roosevelt administration has let out professors, currency experts and Blue Eagle boys with a minimum of embarrassment. It's a gift.

The finest examples of the political kiss-off is J. Crawford Biggs. Mr. Biggs—a delightful southern gentleman of the old school—was first given the key post of solicitor general. Unfortunately members of the supreme court did not appreciate his old-fashioned eloquence. His habit of answering their questions by rambling detours irritated the jurists. They bazed him. He soon resigned to return to private practice.

Although New Dealers prefer no publicity about it, he now draws a salary equal to those of Supreme court justices. James Jones made him a voting trustee on a railroad supervised by the RFC and for that work he receives $10,000 a year. Kindly Homer Cummings has taken him on as a special assistant attorney general for $10,000 more a year. It's a poor pun, but those in the know now refer to large salaries as "Biggs money."

Flexible
Even conservatives were startled by the low scale of wages established for work relief. They freely admit that the hardest-boiled industrialist would have trouble finding grounds for complaint about unfair competition from the government.

Informed New Yorkers doubt that the kickback will be anything like as violent as the initial reactions from labor would indicate. They point out that a large proportion of allotments are specifically exempt—PWA projects, highway construction, etc. Beyond that Hopkins has considerable latitude in shifting the annuities scales. This flexibility will be a great advantage in appeasing discontent if it gets dangerously hot.

Safe
The railway brotherhoods threaten to support the Wheeler bill for public ownership of railroads unless the Crozier pension bill and the proposal to require a three-fourths majority of the supreme court to nullify an act of congress are enacted.

New York interprets this as a beautiful bluff. The brotherhoods don't want public ownership. It's harder to drive a bargain with the government than with a private employer. But they know that the Wheeler bill hasn't the shadow of a chance—so it's perfectly safe to make the gesture.

Familiar
Charles R. Gay's maiden speech as president of the New York stock exchange might well have been delivered by Richard Whitney himself. His only departure from tradition were to say that the national welfare must come first and to pat the securities commission on the back. The latter wasn't unprecedented—Whitney had done it before he quit.

MINIATURE SUNFLOWERS ARE NEW

Miniature sunflowers in a multitude of new varieties have been introduced in recent years and this race derives from the cucumber leafed sunflower of few magnificent material for a tall growing planter toward the back of the border and give fine cutting material. They are entirely lacking in the coarseness of the huge old-fashioned sunflowers that were familiar and cheerful subjects in every backyard, being slender and graceful in growth with small flowers produced in great profusion, many of them with handsomely quilled and twisted petals after the style of the cactus dahlia. Sown now in a sunny spot they will start blooming in July and continue until frost.

They show a wide diversity of form and range from creamy white to rich gorgeous yellows, some with striking black centers.

These sunflowers should be sown where they are to remain and each plant should be given 2 feet of space. They like rich soil and will prove a most attractive surprise to those not familiar with them.

In the old-fashioned huge barnyard sunflower, there has been a surprising change by the introduction of red shades, the flowers somewhat resembling a huge galliard in coloring. While too coarse for small flower gardens they are picturesque as a background or against shrubbery.

Many handsome combinations in the flower garden are possible with the miniature sunflowers which grow from 3 to 4 feet tall, particularly in connection with the bluish red glinnias and the scarlet salvias. They germinate quickly and are excellent material for a late started garden. While, true to their name, they are at their best in full sun, they will give fine bloom in half-shaded positions and brighten up such positions beautifully. Half a day's sun will be sufficient to insure their success.

They have long stems which make them one of the valuable annuals for cutting, the blooms being gracefully poised. There are many excellent varieties, but mixtures are usually most fascinating, because of the wide variety of form that they give.

Flat

When the securities commission's ruling for permanent registration were first announced there was big talk in some corporation circles about preferring to delist their stocks rather than submit to such indignities. This threat has fallen as flat as a year-old mug of beer. Not a single important domestic corporation is holding out.

Shortage

Maybe cynical prediction that work relief won't be much of a stimulus to trade will come true—but you can't sell that idea to the department stores. Several New York lenders in that field are already prophesying inventory shortages by fall. They're in a bit of a lather trying to decide whether to buy now and avoid the rush or wait to see whether prices slide if NRA isn't renewed.

She calls it a Cook's Tour

NOBODY thought Katherine would make a very good wife. She seemed too frivolous. Always made a game out of everything. Hadn't a practical thought in her head—so it seemed.

Maybe that's why she DOES make Ed such a good wife. You still wouldn't think she was serious about a thing. Yet she must be. Because you've never seen a house kept better in your life. Or a budget balanced more neatly.

Most women come home from shopping all tired out. Not Katherine! She makes a grand game of it . . . calls in her weekly "Cook's Tour". She pores over her newspaper like a travel map . . . charts a course that takes her to bargain ports . . . and gets there without one wasted step.

How? She follows the advertisements. Watches them as closely as a sailor watches his compass. And she gets fun out of it all . . . But who wouldn't, with a happy home like hers and her knack for saving up money!

His hope is to impress the federal administration with the fact that the building of modern highways in Texas can provide more and better and quicker employment than weed-cutting, ditching or many of the other former CWA activities. It can do this, he contends, with a minimum waste of abuses, and the result will be a full, permanent, revenue-producing facilities.

Accompanying Chairman Hines to the capital will be the other commissioners, Gibb Gilchrist, state highway engineer, Col. Ike Ashburn of the Texas Good Roads association and envoys from many other groups.

Gov. James V. Alfred favors utilization of road-building as a means of unemployment relief in Texas, and has wired his view to President Roosevelt.

"Well over 90 per cent of the Texas road dollar goes to labor either on the job or in the factories, mills and pits behind it," Mr. Hines explained "and this is why we hope to get some of the money from purely temporary relief projects shifted to it."

"Texas should get over $50,000,000 for roads and grade separations from appropriations already made, and we will ask for $40,000,000 more. We have the plans already for badly-needed roads that will exceed this amount, and we can get them under way swiftly."

The highway chairman explained that he has no thought of disturbing the many worthwhile city and community projects to be presented through FWA, but only random and unplanned work relief.

Kansas has been recognized officially by the department of agriculture as the nineteenth state practically free of bovine tuberculosis.

Planting Reaches Peak As Farmers Stick To Plows

Farmers stuck to their plows Saturday as planting in Howard county reached its peak.

Bulk of the early feed crop was in the ground, according to most of the farmers coming to town for their cotton checks and more seed.

The cotton crop was only about half planted.

In some spots stuff up before rains last week was being left, although it was much the worse for a sharp sand storm a week ago.

Where the stand was not good, farmers were replanting, contending that the crop would require less work and produce as well.

With a good season in the ground, what farmers want now more than anything is hot days and warm nights. The sudden changes characterizing the weather this spring has not been conducive to growing. Most of the early plants are not doing very well.

About the only thing which would lure a farmer from the fields Saturday was cash. Most of them who came after cotton rental checks here were in a hurry to get back.

One farmer told Miss Jennie D. Rogers, who was issuing the checks, that "a farmer came by and waved a check, so I hurried in the model T and come to town. I got to get back to planting."

Harry Hines To Head Delegation To Washington To Secure Hundred Million Dollars For Texas Roads

AUSTIN—In a determined effort to obtain $100,000,000 for gap-closing on Texas highways before the Centennial and the opening of the Mexico City road, Harry Hines, new chairman of the State Highway Commission, will head a delegation of Texas leaders to Washington in mid-June, he has announced.

More Cotton Rental Checks Distributed

More Than Forty Thousand Dollars Arrive For Farmers, Half In

Reception of 303 more first half rental checks brought the total of benefits to cotton producers of Howard county this week to $42,864.46 Saturday.

Distribution of the checks greatly reduced activities in signing applications for cotton exemption certificates and only about 76 were received Saturday.

County Agent O. P. Griffin said that May 31 had been tentatively set as the date for closing out exemption certificate applications. He warned that producers who did not apply for the certificates would have to pay tax on all cotton marketed. About 250 applications are outstanding.

Four blocks of checks Saturday totaled 303 for $18,646.13.

Several hundred checks were given to producers during the day. About half the first half rental checks due producers here have been received.

Relief Work Projects Back To Normal Again

After curtailed funds had forced a curbing of activities early in the week, all relief work projects were back to normal by the end of the week when additional funds were received.

County Administrator L. A. Deason said that men were being furnished for the city paving project and on the highway as usual.

With most of the work in good shape on the east end of highway No. 1 east, a majority of the road workers are being used west planting a caliche base on the rerouted highway in order to have the road ready for traffic by the time the west overpass is completed.

One phase of the purchase of school district refunding bonds was not touched upon the report of an investigating committee that pointed out many of the school bond issues bought by the state board of education were not of the highest rank for investment.

Many issues of bonds had been bought before and during boom times. When the depression struck districts were unable to raise revenues to pay the high interest on the large issues they had sold.

In scores of instances, the state board allowed the schools to make advantageous refunding arrangements, scaling down the principal of outstanding bonds sharply and when they did so, allowed the schools the benefit of such reduction in indebtedness.

The net result obviously was greatly to enhance the value and the probable protection of the reduced issue of bonds.

Had the state board not allowed the districts the benefit of the scaling down in many cases it would have dealt harshly with citizens of a district; and in many others it would have destroyed the value of its own investments.

Further, the recommendation for a band expert has been made long ago, and the services of such an expert have been desired by most of the board of education.

Governor Alfred has indicated he will not wait until the law creating the new state public safety set-up becomes a law in August to name the three public safety commissioners who will administer the department. He will appoint these officials in the near future, so they may begin preliminary work toward organizing the state police system, he announced.

A director for the department will be chosen by the commissioners. The ranger service and highway patrol will be continued intact and agencies of identification and of broadcast or dissemination of information about crime will be set up.

Local law enforcement officers will be enlisted as a vital part of the coordinated state system.

A favorite legislative activity is baiting public officials.

Outside the forms of procedure in the constitution for the legislature to act, it is the most unsatisfactory and unproductive thing imaginable.

Neither the house nor the senate ever turns down anybody's resolution to investigate anybody or anything except lobbyists and lobbying. It will not be long until half the legislature will possibly be on expenses between sessions for investigations of one sort or another.

An example of the inadequacy and futile kind of legislative inquiry is that just completed by as able a group of lawmakers as could have been appointed on a committee. That committee held secret sessions off and on for four months. It reported out what it found to be highly unsatisfactory procedure in Agricultural Commissioner J. E. McDonald's office, but all the members but one said they did not recommend action because evidence would not sustain charges for removal of the official.

The same committee slipped here and there, and in a published, privileged report, branded at least half a dozen public officials with charges of misconduct ranging from trivial matters to others that, if true, should result in action of some sort. The house disagreed with the majority as to the agricultural department, when somebody proposed a separate investigation and voted to go over the same stuff again.

The state has enforcement agencies. It has the auditor to check up on financial transactions. The attorney general is subject to direction by the governor, and charged also with the duty to act upon his own motion, in relation

 By Raymond Brooks

There are between 40 and 45 of the Texas Young Democrats in the present legislature.

Group organization work of Elliott Rosevear, Thad Scott, John McCarty, Red Christie, Raymond Buck and others emphasizes the weight and potential effect of this well-knit unit of votes in the legislature.

The Young Democrat leaders are planning to double membership of the organization and thus to become still more effective in advancing members and those they support, to public office.

But in the present membership, the Young Democrat group is conscious that upon measures that its members agree and adopt, the organization now swings an easy balance of power.

With the present impetus it is entirely possible that this group may have the effectiveness in state legislative matters of one of the to failure in the performance of public duties.

A legislature with 181 people can not be guided by full information in possession of all those who vote, and those who prejudice, those who have a personal grievance or a political disagreement are given an improper advantage in the disposition of the legislature to authorize and set up any sort of an investigating committee any time . . . The habit has now developed into virtually permanent committees with unlimited power to investigate anything, anywhere and any time.

Texas so far has not been assumed to be governed by the parliamentary system.

It does not defend or condone any sort of misconduct to say that until the system is changed, the responsibility lies in the hands of executive officers, except as to impeachment of certain constitutional officers; and the effort to subject everything to legislative domination as much violates the principle of the present system of government as most of the abuses it seeks to expose and correct.
