Immediate Price-Fixing For Oil Industry Understood To Be Plan Of President In Naming Committee

C. F. Roesser Of Fort Worth May Be Member Of Committee

WASHINGTON (AP)—Immediate price-fixing for the oil industry Wednesday was understood in authoritative sources to be receiving serious consideration by the administration in its basic plans for stabilizing the industry.

Announcement by the president of membership of the committee of fifteen to govern the industry is expected to disclose a majority in favor of price regulation.

It was intimated in some circles, however, that the president did not favor embarking upon a broad price fixing plan immediately but would move slowly in this respect.

C. F. Roesser, Fort Worth, was mentioned as a member of the committee.

WASHINGTON

By George Durno

Perkins

Hard-headed men of toil who built organized labor up to its present high estate in our scheme of affairs are looking a decided askance at "Madam Secretary."

In case you don't recognize the title, reference is being made to Miss Frances Perkins, secretary of labor and first woman ever to achieve a cabinet post.

Labor men will tell you privately they think she has soured the one pet department they forced into the government establishment.

Union representatives are giving the labor department the go-by because they say the New Deal atmosphere here is too rarified for their lusty lungs.

Where once they called to meet men personally selected by the American Federation of Labor—and fraternal accordingly—they now declaim they can't get their base Miss Perkins, charge the laborites, has surrounded herself with a lot of social welfare workers whose fundamental teaching has been to "take care of the worker."

"We don't want to be cared for," say the union men; "we merely demand a living wage and the privilege of taking care of ourselves."

Cotton Batting

Strangely enough, organized labor leaders were quite satisfied with the general labor department setup installed by former President Hoover.

However, it seems, look A. F. of L. advise of them exclusively in an appointing—or retaining—key men in the department. A lot of these men have gone out since March 4 because they "were Republican appointees."

Other carry-overs are on the ragged edge.

"A social welfare worker," explained one of labor's pioneers, "doesn't have the same slant as a union man. The welfare worker is taught to take care of as many people as possible. We don't want that. We're perfectly capable of fighting our own battles and not on the basis of bread-line treatment."

Labor men call Madam Perkins' assistants "cotton batting experts." Many of them were recruited from Brookings Institute and similar institutions of higher acquirement.

"Does this administration expect to get its votes next year," queried one of the snubbed, "from Brookings Institute or does it expect votes from the ranks of labor?"

Annoying

One of the moves apparently in prospect that annoys union men is the unofficial consolidation of the Bureau of Labor Statistics and the U. S. Conciliation Service, the first named branch to be in control.

The latter branch, with highly trained men, has been mediating strikes of all sorts for years. After making their party calls, those who constitute the backbone of the A. F. of L. are leaving the Department.

Home Town Talk by Betty

We have never regarded revenue to the government or commercial activity locally as paramount arguments in favor of legalization of 3.2 per cent beer. But, since it has been legalized here, effective September 15, we may look forward to quite a stir in some lines of business, and a measure of stimulation for all lines when the beverage begins flowing in Big Spring.

The fact is Big Spring is in line for more than an average volume of new business due to the fact that so many neighboring counties remain dry. Week-end visitors will be here in much greater numbers and travelers will be much more liable to pause here over night as they traverse the state.

As things have shaped up the hotels ought to feel quite a revival of business temporarily and some permanent added volume of patronage. Of course, after the first few weeks the number of places selling beer will decline and the business will settle down to a normal trend, with a few places profiting from the beverage for this part of the country.

Fifty-two banks in the Dallas federal reserve district were not licensed to re-open following the March bank moratorium. Ten millions in deposits were frozen in them. That does not include the numerous banks that closed prior to and that have closed since the moratorium.

The people of Big Spring and its trade territory ought to realize that they are exceedingly fortunate in that no deposits have been frozen from them. That in itself places the

Imbibers Of 3.2 Beer In Howard And Other Texas Counties Will Drink In Behalf Of Schools Because Of Tax

One consolation remains for those who loathe lager and pretzels. When lovers of 3.2 brew drink they will be guzzling for "education."

One half of all state taxes collected on sale of beer and licenses, will go to the public school system. Couple this with increased revenues from cigarette tax (because the schools are to get all of the tax) and the financial situation confronting schools is much brighter than it has been in several years. Beer tax money, drys aver, is blood money, at least that was pre-prohibition contention. The "blood" money was not anticipated when the state legislature set the apportionment figure at $16 per capita. Reception of it may enable the state to meet payment of apportionments more quickly than in the past.

LOVE, PREFERRED

Die did not refer again to what he had said about having something to tell her, until they had finished with an excellent dinner. His hopes were fulfilled. No other guests found the secluded inn of the pine-wooded hills.

So they drew their Windsor chairs up before the fire, at their amiable hostess' invitation and looked at each other with the wonder of being alone together, again Mary wondered what he was going to say to her. So they stared into the fire for confused, thoughtful moments.

Finally, he began. "When you said last night that you owed me your fingers, Mary—did you mean that was the real reason why you are being kind to me?" His eyes searched her face and he reached over to take her hand awkwardly.

"Why not of course not," she almost whispered.

"Then you—do forgive me—dear?"

"Oh, Dick—there really is nothing to forgive. You couldn't help it that you loved someone else. I know—and I'm sorry you were let down, too."

He looked at her with amazement. "Well, you don't need to pity me about that. I count myself a lucky man. I don't deserve to have been prevented from making a foolish mistake. Oh Mary—that just's the rotten part of it. As you say—if I had loved her—but I didn't—not for a moment," he confessed, ashamed. "Just a darned fool, that's all."

"Mary," he said. "He never loved her for a moment. He was miserable all the time, all the time."

Her other hand pressed his and he covered it instantly, so that they held each other's.

"I am afraid to ask you, Mary—could you love me yet, do you suppose? Even when I tried to deny you, I knew that it was you whom I loved all the time."

"Oh, Dick, I've never stopped loving you—not for a moment. I couldn't, even when I tried. I did try, but it was no use. There were tears of joy in the sweet, husky voice—just a dewy sweetness which was just that left of her tears of grief."

He knelt down beside her and put his arms about her, with adoration.

"I feel that I had been away on morning. It had been a beautiful morning—it was a radiant night. The universe vibrated with the melody of the song in her heart. Every moment she was deliciously conscious of the new ring on her finger. It possessed her. It was Dick's ring and she belonged to Dick.

Once, on the way, he parked the car beside the road and took her in his arms. "Will you let me tell you again how I love you, Mary?"

"I never can hear that enough," she whispered. "Tell me a thousand times and it will never be enough."

"I'll tell you a thousand times, in a thousand ways, sweetheart. How do you like this way?"

When she could speak again, she sighed. "That was so sweet, Dick darling. I don't know what way I like the best. Anything and everything you do, is sweet."

"I'll try to keep my good reputation with you. I've known all the time that I wanted and needed you, Mary, but you make wonder now how I ever lived without you. I guess I had to lose you to know you were meant for me."

Mary reflected that those winter months really had not been lived—she had endured them, only. She had ached and waited for this. She went to sleep that night feeling free and clean and ready for anything—like a winged goddess of power and freedom. Nothing, she thought, ever could be wrong again. No matter what else might happen in the whole world, it would come out all right—because she and Dick were reunited.

But it was only the following morning that her world became chaos again, when a tremendous problem confronted her at the office.

Even before that, the first incident of the day was disturbing. Mon was up to prepare her breakfast, although Mary continually protested against it.

But Mon always insisted, "Don't be talkin' about me layin' abed at my age, child. I like to get up mornings—I have all my life, so it's a habit with me. You can't teach an old dog new tricks."

Mary would sigh resignedly. "Well, promise me you will lie down and rest today, won't you?"

Then Mon would promise to take a nap later in the day.

On that Monday morning after Mary became engaged to Dick, Mon had a message for her which she had come in too late to get the Warren, who is now in Europe, continues to go hook, line and sinker for a cut in the gold value of the dollar as the only solution. Informed New Yorkers point out that once devaluation is a fact accomplished, that will be that. It is a case where the threat is more potent in its effects than the reality. Rogers wants no part of a dollar cut. His idea is that money should be spent to provide work for people in the heavy industries, especially through government construction. His plan calls for a government outlay of $700,000,000 a month until it produces the desired effect. This figure is based on an annual expenditure of seven billion dollars for capital goods in the property period. Only the government will now be able to absorb the people who made a living from that flow.

WHIRLIGIG—

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 1) of Labor and saying: 'Imagine sending a conciliator out in the field to settle a strike with a head full of decimal points!' The future of organized labor appears to be fraught with uncertainty as to outcomes from the present national experiment. There is no uncertainty however insofar as labor's ultimate objective is concerned. A highly concentrated drive is now under way to distribute union cards among the great bulk of those who earn a living from a definite line of endeavor. Many thousands of workers already have been gathered in the field.

Pyramids—

Two highly representative spokesmen of labor sit at lunch. One has fought the long fight for two generations and more. He has learned the art of introspection in half a century. The other, although his hair is graying, still feels the vigor of his powerful physique and has a reserved desire for further battle with the barons of industry. Both agree that the laboring man must survive this shuddery era or all the gains of our comparatively young nation are lost. Both point to the fact—based on census bureau figures—that whereas wages have pyramided several times over since the civil war, returns to the employer stand at a ratio of 6 to 1 in favor of the top dog. "Machine age," they both summarize the situation, and add—"greed on the employer's part."

No—

Here our labor spokesmen diverge in their viewpoints. Says the older man: "We have fought for years to get what we have now. The LaGuardia anti-injunction law protects us against the general antagonism heretofore displayed by all branches of government. Superimposed on that is the National Recovery Act which guarantees us the right of organization and collective bargaining. Our leaders are taking a long-range view of the situation and labor will be well entrenched before long without strong-arm methods."

Yes—

The younger man interjects: "True that Green and the others don't want strikes and are building for the future. But as I see it we are going through a period comparable to the war only worse. "During the war employers operated on a 'cost-plus-ten' basis. The higher the wages the higher their (on per cent. Yet we had strikes all over the country despite our most patriotic appeals. "Today the employer is being asked to raise pay and lower hours and work out his own salvation. He's chiseling to do it. Wise words may come from headquarters to sit

There has been some ingenious gold bootlegging going around here. The trick is to buy gold for jewelry purposes at $20.67 an ounce, make up rings and other ornaments cheaply and export them—perfectly legally—to Canada. They are melted down and the gold contents sold at the world price. This system nets a profit of about $10 an ounce.

New York utility men have an anxious eye on Birmingham. They say the first major test of public versus private utilities is coming there. The city is likely to make a proposition to the electric light company now operating to buy its plant at what amounts to its value as junk. If the company declines the offer the city may then build a distributing plant of its own and go into competition, probably using Muscle Shoals power. It is understood here that the question of municipal borrowing for the purpose will be put up to the Birmingham voters. If they approve the lid is off. And it would not take other cities long to get the

Frank Hitchcock Believes Air Mail Line To Continue

Frank Hitchcock, postmaster general in the cabinet of President William Howard Taft and generally recognized as "the father of the air mail," does not believe the government will discontinue the subsidy for air mail service between Dallas and Los Angeles along the southern transcontinental route on which American Airways operates. Mr. Hitchcock was a passenger on Wednesday morning's American Airways ship enroute from his home in Tucson, Ariz., to Chicago, where he will attend the air races at A Century of Progress. He frequently stops here on transcontinental trips. He is publisher of The Tucson Citizen. "The college professor who made a survey of the air mail system last year for the house committee looked from a long distance at wide gaps between the towns along this line and concluded sufficient air mail poundage could not be created," said Hitchcock. "He did not take into consideration the volume of mail picked up on the coast and carried into the east, as well as the large amount of mail that needs to be transported from the east across the continent." Mr. Hitchcock also agreed with the opinion expressed to him that certain men who are influential with the present administration are directly interested in maintaining operation of this line.
