We Meant What We Said

"We owe it, there fore, to candor . . . to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety."

No, that is not President F. D. Roosevelt speaking of Greenland in 1941. That is President James Monroe speaking of the whole Western Hemisphere in 1823.

But the passing of 118 years has not changed the essential wisdom of Monroe's Doctrine. In fact, it has heightened it. With rapid transportation and the bombing plane, it is more than ever necessary that no European or Asiatic nation be allowed to get a new foothold on Western Hemisphere territory.

It is a simple fact that Canada and the United States would not feel safe if a German air base were to be set up in southern Greenland. It is less than a thousand miles to the North American seaboard from that point-just a hop-skip-and-jump for a modern long-range bomber.

Experience of the past two years has amply proved that the only way to assure safety in these matters is to move first. The British hesitated to violate the neutrality of Belgium and Holland and Scandinavia. And while they hesitated, mediating on niceties of international law, the salt water, and as a result, all of Nazis acted. Seizing the initiative in each case, they were said wells would be ruined if per-"there fustet with the mostest." And they won.

President Roosevelt would seem to have learned the lesson. Grmany might well want Greenland because of its | a result, all of sand oil and gas value as a base to attack British shipping as a weather observation station, as a source of cryolite. Her planes have soared over it. The President obviously determined that this time the Germans should not be first. Greenland, al- lars; and most all of it, is clearly in the Western Hemisphere. Its occupation by Germany would be a danger to the United States. We act, therefore, in our own interest, determined | and that in the event the pipe for once to "be there first."

Europe and all the lands in it may be merely a set of prizes to be raked in by the strongest, like chips in a poker game. But the lands of the Western Hemisphere are not prizes to be fought over in this way.

The United States so determined 118 years ago. The American republics, all of them, are like-minded today.
