That reminds me...

Picked up the Bible, went through chapters and verses of the Old and New Testaments, read how the wrath was visited on those who offended and the punishment. Searched through the volumes of the "Outline of History," that tells of world loves and atrocities back through the ages.

There are those in this nation who would throw us into the same kind of pell-mell of confusion if only given the slightest chance. There are cruel men and cruel women. There are even children who give demonstrations of horrible tendencies. Surely there must be a remedy.

As we understand it, in Russia, Germany, Italy, the rulers designate what should be taught the child, regardless of how ambitious they may be to learn something worth while. Those who saw "Green Pastures" even though it was in the simple atmosphere of a dream, can well think and realize, "It is no wonder that God is still dissatisfied with His human creations."

Dust filled the air, and it also seeped through every crevice in the homes and business houses since Monday morning. By nightfall Monday it was worse than at the beginning. Early this morning the haze was still thick enough to where visibility was only about four or five blocks, and it is still lasting until this writing. It is the worst in this section since 1934.

The bill to repeal Texas Horse Race Betting now before the Senate is something that every citizen will welcome if it finally becomes a law. Funny, but its the hardest thing in the world to keep any sport clean, just as soon as betting becomes the major factor. There are tricks to all trades, but the trick applied to sports once it becomes impregnated with tricks are the worst of all.

Of course at present, gambling cannot be stopped, neither can murder. In time man may find something to take away the desire and interest in man's worst enemies. We throw away an empty tin can as worthless, but some people would kill to get that empty can back if they thought it was worth 15 cents. Money is truly the root of all evil, especially when its possession is so badly abused, to be used for power instead of the necessities of life.

Federal Tax Bill Of Motorists Is Greatly Increased

WASHINGTON. — Motorist taxpayers dug deeper into their collective pockets in 1936 as special federal taxes imposed upon automotive products rose 14.2 per cent. The total federal automotive tax bill for 1936 was $338,100,126.56, an all-time high since the inception of these special taxes.

Chief factor in both the size of the tax bill and the large increase over the previous year was the duplicating federal gasoline tax. This levy, imposed at the rate of 1 cent per gallon, in 1936 cost motorists a total of $186,321,448.52. This amounted to 55 per cent of the total federal automotive tax bill.

U. S. Proves Security, Liberty Are Compatible

It isn't always easy to recognize a historic process when you are in the middle of it. For that reason we have been slow to see the tremendous importance of our current struggle to regain prosperity, and iron out the bumps in our economic life.

President Roosevelt touched on this point in his message to Congress.

The economic breakdown, he remarked, had led many Americans to doubt "the successful adaptation of our historic traditions to the complex modern world." Thus, he added, was in itself a challenge to our form of government.

"Ours was the task," he added, "to prove that democracy could be made to function in the world of today as effectively as in the simpler world of 100 years ago. Ours was the task to do more than to argue a theory."

Any American can have his own opinion, of course, as to whether the administration has performed that task well or poorly. The point to remember is that all our troubles of the last six or seven years simply add to a great, crucial test of democracy and freedom.

In some countries overseas, where democracy was of recent and uncertain growth, that test came out disastrously. Beset by troubles they could not solve, the people turned entirely away from democracy, decided that freedom was a poor thing if starvation went with it, and called on the dictators to take things in charge.

The dictators were no more able to get at the roots of these troubles than were the liberal governments they destroyed. They didn't try to. They merely put their heads down and tried to butt their way through; and, in doing so, they turned the clock back some centuries.

For in this era of dictatorships there has been a return to an outward idea of human society—the idea that the common man exists for the state, rather than that the state exists for the common man.

Under this idea the state is not required to remove troubles from the common man's path; the common man is required to accept those troubles—to take it and like it, as they say—for the sake of the state.

It was up to the United States to prove that sort of thing was unnecessary and a mistake. There was just one way the United States could do it: by proving in actual experience that a democracy could solve these problems without becoming something other than a democracy.

To date that job has been pretty well done. This may have been due to the wisdom of the government, or it may have been due to natural forces operating independently of the government.

For the moment it makes little difference. The point is that democracy has been justified. The world has been shown that it is not necessary to sacrifice liberty for security.

Museum Shows Surrealist Art

PHILADELPHIA—An exhibition of Surrealism—the latest thing in art—has been attracting considerable attention at the Philadelphia Museum of Art.

About 500 works of art, painted from the imagination of 150 Surrealists, arrived here recently from the Modern Museum of Art in New York City to be placed on exhibit at Philadelphia's art center.

This type art is a newcomer to circles where artists and critics gather to discuss art. The average citizen is hard put to find a definition for it.

According to Fiske Kimball, director of the museum, Surrealism is supposed to represent a sort of "Alice in Wonderland" in art. Another artist said that it is simply a dream of the artist put on canvas and might be considered in the same light as the "stream of Consciousness" writing.

Surrealism had its start early this century in Paris. A number of young painters and etchers decided that everything had been done in classic art and youth needed a new field. The result was that two-headed people, multi-legged cows on trapezes, and trains going forward in reverse, appeared on canvas.

Decorators and commercial artists were quick to sense that here was something new and useful. Merchandise displays and decorations soon began to feature Surrealism.

An example of the art seen at the preview of the exhibition was a wax foot with six toes and swollen ankles underneath a pink umbrella and titled: "Man Throwing Stone at Bird."

Air pilots are complaining that they sometimes lose their course because the radio beams swing. Still, the craze may soon die down.

Plowhorse Plays Role of Cupid to A Young Couple

JENA, La.—Selum, outwardly just an ordinary farm horse, recently was Cupid in disguise.

Selum was bought with money furnished by the Resettlement Administration and became the property of the Paul J. Green family.

The many-linked chain of events that transformed Selum from a work-horse into the little-fellow-with-the-arrows began with the RA's discovery of the Green family. Searching for worthy families to rehabilitate, RA field men found in the hills of LaSalle parish Paul Green and his wife hitched to a plow, with Ruth Green, their comely 17-year-old daughter, holding the plow handles and making slow but sure progress in breaking ground.

RA promptly loaned Green enough money to ease his way through the 1936 crop year. Sixty-five dollars went to purchase Selum, who immediately brought luck to the Green family fortunes. With a fair crop made and most of his debts cleared, Paul Green could be observed smiling again.

RA officials sensed that the thrift and perseverance of the little back woods family was a good advertisement of their work. They photographed the group, Selum included, and circulated the pictures throughout the nation.

In Jacksonville, Ill., Russell Lowell Androm, 21, farm youth, was one of many who viewed the pictures. A letter to Ruth followed. An answer sped back through the mails and a correspondence courtship ensued. Later a proposal was mailed and an answer, "Yes," was posted on return mail.

In company with his brother, Leslie Androm, Russell arrived in Jena on January 22, met his sweetheart and was married the next day.

An independent survey was made recently among professional men and women—lawyers, doctors, lecturers, scientists, etc. Of those who said they smoke cigarettes, more than 87% stated they personally prefer a light smoke.

Miss Stanwyck verifies the wisdom of this preference, and so do other leading artists of the radio, stage, screen and opera. Their voices are their fortunes. That's why so many of them smoke Luckies. Behind the Scenes in Washington

BY RODNEY DUTCHER NEA Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON — It develops that this nation, which constitutionally has only 96 senators, recently had 97 and that, while all other states had their customary two senators apiece, Minnesota was having three.

The three were Henrik Shipstead, Guy V. Howard—the obscure Republican who served a two-month term in November and December because no other Minnesotan thought to run for the brief vacancy—and Elmer Benson, whose term as senator technically expired when he was elected governor on Nov. 3, but who kept right on fulfilling the duties of that office until Senator Lundeen took it over on Jan. 4.

The terrible truth emerges in a resolution by Senator Lew Schwollenbach of Washington which proposes to pay salaries of Benson and his staff for that period.

IT appears that while Senator Howard and his family were drawing all the pay and doing none of the work, Senator Benson and his staff were doing vice versa.

Both had offices with their name plates on the door. Entitled to bestow four secretarial jobs for 60 days, Howard kept them carefully in the family and drew Treasury checks totaling $3886.86.

Benson asked Schwollenbach to introduce the compensation bill, but it's doubtful whether the Senate will recognize Benson's last 60 days of service. You probably would have a hard time figuring just how valuable to the nation Benson and his staff really were in those two months.

CONGRESSMAN JAMES BUCHANAN of Texas, who remained in the House so long that he became chairman of the powerful Appropriations Committee, is sometimes considered a prosaic old gentleman who thinks only in long, dull columns of figures and dollar marks.

But "Buck" got to talking about the flood the other day, assuming his colleagues that he "did not have sense enough to make a good farmer, but did have sense enough to make a good congressman."

Once he had held of 3500 acres of Brazos river bottom land and put everything he had into it until he had 2500 acres of "land well watered, well equipped with houses, well tenanted, and well stocked." Then came the floods and after a while "all the houses had gone down the river, as well as the mules I had and my hogs and cattle and crops, with my tenants left starving on the bank."

"I got myself a plank and I got some charcoal," he related. "I nailed that plank at the high water mark, and here is what I wrote on that plank. It expressed the way I felt then and the way I feel now:

"Farewell to the Brazos bottom, I bid you a long adieu; I may migrate to hell some day But I will never return to you."

And after this outburst of poesy Buchanan added:

"From that day to this I have been the relentless enemy of flood water anywhere and everywhere, and if I can contribute by my voice or by my vote or by my work to the prevention of floods throughout this Union, I shall make that contribution more cheerfully than I ever made any contribution in my life."

All of which speaks well for chances of big fat flood relief control appropriations. (Copyright, 1937, NEA Service, Inc.)

CONFIDENTIAL REPORT

CRIME FILE ON BOLITHO BLANE

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Investigating the murder of BOLITHO BLANE, British innkeeper, aboard the CARLTON ROCKS SAUVAGE yacht, Detective Officer KETTERING runs into a maze of conflicting circumstances. Each of the ship's passengers appear involved in some manner. These include LADY WELTER, her daughter and non-in-law, REGINALD and MRS. JOCELYN COUNT FOSDICK; the BISHOP OF BUDE; and INOSUKE HAYASHI. Only NICHOLAS STODART, Blane's secretary, appears above suspicion since he was in the ship's lounge all during the period in which the crime obviously was committed.

As the investigation progresses, Kettering, taking advantage of Jocelyn's falsifying, spurs him to reveal that Rocksavage had the real motive for murder—financial gain. He reveals also that Rocksavage had boasted of being able to dress for dinner in four minutes, a feat conceivably enabling him to commit a murder and return to the ship's lounge without arousing suspicion.

Later, Kettering confronts Rocksavage with this revelation. Immediately Rocksavage counters that he saw Jocelyn herself near Blane's cabin at approximately the time of the murder.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

K.: So you say you passed Jocelyn in the passage at 8:10?

R.: I certainly did, so perhaps you'll exercise your talents in finding out what he was up to between 7:45 and 8:10. There was much more time for him to have done this job than me.

K.: He hadn't got your motive.

R.: He certainly had. He's always lived above his income. For the last five years he's been entirely dependent on Lady Welter. She's in a jam because of those fool papers she runs. She loses a packet on them every year, yet she won't give them up because she just lives for this Christian crusading business.

If I'd failed to do a deal with Blane she would have gone under with me and young Jocelyn would have found himself on his uppers. He stood to benefit just as much by Blane's death as I did. More, in fact, because even if Rocksavage Consolidated had gone down the drain I have other resources.

K.: I get your point, Mr. Rocksavage.

R.: How about the Jap, too?

K.: How about him?

R.: Well, he stood in to lose a million dollars if Blane had lived long enough to come to an arrangement with me.

K.: I'd certainly like to hear some more about that, Mr. Rocksavage.

R.: It's this way. Officially he's acting for the Shikoku people and he's been trying to sell me the Japanese soap monopoly on their behalf for months past, but he's playing ball with another crowd called the Tokami Soap Company on the side.

They're in a position where they might be able to queer the pitch as a home producing firm by rousing national opinion against the monopoly going outside Japan, unless they're squared first. Their price was a million, so Hayashi wouldn't have got it all, but I'll bet he stood in for a pretty useful split. I wouldn't conclude, though, once I got the idea of coming to terms with Blane, but if my deal with him had fallen through Hayashi knew he could count on my signing up. It's plain sailing for him now Blane's out of the way, and you know what these Orientals are. He had a mighty strong motive to go in Blane in order to prevent Blane and me getting together.

K.: That's certainly something to work on, Mr. Rocksavage, and I'll get down to following up what you've said of Jocelyn and Hayashi right away.

L.W.: I find all this most tiresome. I've already told you that I know nothing whatsoever about this man Blane's death.

K.: It hasn't occurred to you I suppose that you might be charged with it?

L.W.: What! If you're mad, my man, I shall report you.

K.: You can make any report you like but it won't alter the fact that you had a very strong motive for wishing Bolitho Blane out of the way.

L.W.: This is ridiculous.

K.: Not at all. You lost a big portion of your fortune in 1929, you've been paying up the losses on these papers which you run for years and now you are up against it, because the Rocksavage companies in which the remainder of your money is invested passed their dividend last year. Owing to Blane's death Rocksavage is back on his feet again and you wish him.

L.W.: Well, if that is so Mr. Rocksavage benefits by this man Blane's death just as much as I do.

K.: You're wrong there. Rocksavage has other assets outside his soap companies, whereas you haven't, so motive is stronger in your case.

L.W.: This is absurd, as though an elderly woman like myself could murder a man and push him out of the port-hole.

K.: You're only 55, Lady Welter, and a strong, well-preserved woman at that. Let me assure you from my police experience that many a woman with less physical strength than yourself could have done this business and in your case the motive was there. Moreover, there is no check on your movements from the time you came below with the bishop at 7:05 until you arrived in the lounge changed at 8:05 on the night of Blane's death.

L.W.: Oh, yes there is, young man. My maid was with me, helping me to dress for dinner.

K.: Ah, now that puts a very different complexion on it, but why didn't you tell me that before, Lady Welter?

L.W.: Because I didn't think you could be such a fool as to suspect a woman like myself of a crime like this.

K.: Was she with you the whole time?

L.W.: No, I rang for her when I reached my cabin and she was with me for about half an hour, until I had finished dressing.

K.: Wait a moment, then, that only gets us to about 7:35, and we know Blane was alive at 7:45. You were already changed and you had 20 minutes, therefore, in which you might have done this job before arriving in the lounge.

L.W.: I was in my cabin the whole time.

K.: So you say, Lady, but I want proof of that, and if you're a wise woman, you'll do your best to produce it.

L.W.: Proof! But how can anybody prove such a thing? You must take my word for it.

K.: I'm afraid I want something more than that. What were you doing all that time?

L.W.: Well, if you must know, I was knitting a jumper. I only had one sleeve to do so I thought I would finish it before I went up to dinner.

K.: Can you give me any proof of that?

L.W.: Yes. My maid knows just how far I had got with the jumper before I dressed that evening and I left it finished on the table for her to press when I left my cabin half an hour later.

L.W.: This is absurd, as though an elderly woman like myself could murder a man and push him out of the port-hole.

K.: You're only 55, Lady Welter, and a strong, well-preserved woman at that. Let me assure you from my police experience that many a woman with less physical strength than yourself could have done this business and in your case the motive was there. Moreover, there is no check on your movements from the time you came below with the bishop at 7:05 until you arrived in the lounge changed at 8:05 on the night of Blane's death.

L.W.: Oh, yes there is, young man. My maid was with me, helping me to dress for dinner.

K.: Ah, now that puts a very different complexion on it, but why didn't you tell me that before, Lady Welter?

L.W.: Because I didn't think you could be such a fool as to suspect a woman like myself of a crime like this.

K.: Was she with you the whole time?

L.W.: No, I rang for her when I reached my cabin and she was with me for about half an hour, until I had finished dressing.

K.: Wait a moment, then, that only gets us to about 7:35, and we know Blane was alive at 7:45. You were already changed and you had 20 minutes, therefore, in which you might have done this job before arriving in the lounge.

L.W.: I was in my cabin the whole time.

K.: So you say, Lady, but I want proof of that, and if you're a wise woman, you'll do your best to produce it.

L.W.: Proof! But how can anybody prove such a thing? You must take my word for it.

K.: I'm afraid I want something more than that. What were you doing all that time?

L.W.: Well, if you must know, I was knitting a jumper. I only had one sleeve to do so I thought I would finish it before I went up to dinner.

K.: Can you give me any proof of that?

L.W.: Yes. My maid knows just how far I had got with the jumper before I dressed that evening and I left it finished on the table for her to press when I left my cabin half an hour later.

K.: All right. That'll do for the moment.

known as bronchitis. If the germs get down to the lungs the person affected has pneumonia. Thus it may be seen that the common cold may be the beginning of one of the most serious complications of the respiratory tract.

"These respiratory diseases may be avoided many times by establishing individual health measures. Help prevent colds and pneumonia by proper personal hygiene. Eat moderately, drink plenty of water and sleep 8 to 10 hours every night with the windows open. Do not allow the temperature of your home or working place to exceed 70 degrees Fahrenheit. Wash your hands frequently, especially before eating. Take some exercise out of doors every day, but avoid fatigue and unnecessary exposure to cold weather and rain.

DETROIT.—Normie Smith names Sweeney Schriener of the New York Americans, Marly Barry of Detroit, and Cecil Dillon of the New York Rangers as the best line of hockey and the diminutive Red Wing goalie analyzes them interestingly.

Smith calls Schriener, the left wing, the toughest of the three. Barry, the center, is a master of fakes and shots. Dillon, the right wing, is the most resourceful.

Scrih confesses that he starts to fidget the second Schriener crosses the Detroit blue line.

"You know that Schriener is a finished scorer to start with, but in addition he has a change of pace that baffles a goalie," says the Red Wing net-minder. "He seems to be skating slowly and you react at about the same tempo only to discover that he has put on a burst of speed and has caught you flatfooted. It's big enough to keep going unless defensemen hit him squarely."

Sweeney's ability to catch them out of position with his blinding speed allows him to drive in a goalie. And after all it's the defensemen who take the burden off the goalie.

"ONCE inside a defense, Schriener is dynamite. He knows all the tricks on how to beat a goalie. He needs only an opening the size of the eye of a needle. Watch him during a game and notice how few chances he misses when he gets in close. If he does miss a score, he'll at least be somewhere on that net."

Dillon is a different type than Schriener. He depends upon pure speed to get past a defenseman and he is a more experienced player than Schriener.

"Dillon never will try to beat you twice the same way," asserts Smith. "He's low first, then high for a corner, then he'll try to draw you out, or he may blaze away from 15 feet out and catch you fanning thin air."

"Cecil never permits himself to be hurried. If you make the first move against him, you're gone, for he's quick enough to take advantage of every opening."

"There may be some goalies who find Charley Conacher harder to combat than Dillon, but Herold Lewis, our defensive left wing, seems to be able to tie up Conacher whenever we play against him. Of course, Conacher has been out since this season started with that wrist injury, but nevertheless I rank Dillon tops at right wing."

SMITH laughs in relating how Barry makes a monkey out of him in practice.

"Not so much this season because Barry's jet up, but last season he delighted in making all sorts of fancy shots during practice," beams the Detroit goal tender. "The other fellows used to stop play to watch him beat me time after time. Of all the centers I've ever faced none compares with Marty."

Smith concludes by asserting that he lays back night after night watching Barry score on rival goalies and saying to himself: "Smith, you don't know how lucky you are to be on the same team with Barry."

Little Normie really feels sorry for the other goalies when Barry gets in close and has the puck in his stick.

It would take the pick of the National League's best back-checking forwards and stoutest defensemen to halt Normie Smith's pest line of hockey.

Baked Bluefish
(4 to 6 servings)

One bluefish or 2 fresh or frozen fillets weighing in all, 3 pounds; 1 teaspoon salt, few grains pepper, 2 tablespoons melted butter, 1 lemon, 7 cooked carrots, 2 tablespoons butter, parsley or watercress.

If whole fish is used, split in the middle of the back. If fillets are used, score them crosswise two or three times. Rub fish well with salt and pepper, then brush with melted butter.

Place the fish, skin side up, on a well greased heat resistant glass platter. Place the juices of 1-2 lemons over it. Cut the cooked carrots lengthwise in half and brush with butter. Arrange them on platter as a border for the fish.

Bake in hot oven (400 degrees F.) for 30 minutes. Garnish with parsley or chilled watercress. Serve while piping hot from the same glass dish it was baked in. Any laments over this idea?

Southern cucumbers are in the market at reasonable prices. Use them with fish to give that difference which confuses the fish-hater.

Tomorrow's Menu

LUNCHEON: Grapefruit juice, creamed ham on toast, rolls, frosted ginger bread, tea, milk.

spoon chopped parsley, 2 teaspoons chopped chives, 1 cup chopped celery, 1 hard-cooked egg, chopped, 1 tablespoon butter, 1 tablespoon flour, 1 tablespoon chopped onion, 3-4 cup milk, seasoning to taste.

Peel cucumbers. Cut in half lengthwise, remove seeds and pulpy parts. Stand for 20 minutes in salted ice water. Remove, rinse and boil for 6 minutes. Drain and wash in cold water.

Heat butter. Add chopped onion, cook for 2 minutes until tender but not browned. Add flour and mix well, then slowly add milk. Add all the other ingredients to this flour and milk combination. Pneumonia Often Follows a Cold

AUSTIN. — Pneumonia is always a serious disease, and early treatment is of paramount importance to lessen the severity of the disease and prevent death, is the warning issued by Dr. George W. Cox, state health officer.

"A person previously well may develop pneumonia suddenly," he said, "but most often it occurs in persons who have, or who recently have had, a cold. Yet many people do not take the cold seriously enough. Suspect every cold. Go to bed immediately if you have a fever with a cold, call your physician, and do exactly what he says. By intelligently following your physician's advice at the beginning of the attack you may ward off the after effects which so often follow neglected colds—pneumonia among them."

"Almost any part of the air passage may sometimes be attacked by bacteria. When the nose is affected we call the condition a cold. The tissues of the nose react to such infection by a profuse mucous discharge of mucous liquid. This discharge is really an attempt on the part of the body to get rid of the germs and their poisons. If the infection is lower down, it causes a sore throat. If the voice box is affected the condition is called laryngitis. If the germs reach the bronchi, the disease is known as bronchitis. If the germs get down to the lungs the person affected has pneumonia. Thus it may be seen that the common cold may be the beginning of one of the most serious complications of the respiratory tract.
