

Plane Passengers, Miraculously Rescued At Sea, Brought To Port

NEW YORK, Jan. 23 (AP)—Safe after one of the most dramatic rescues in the annals of trans- oceanic air travel, five men and five women survivors of the sinking flying boat Cavalier approached New York today aboard the tanker Esso Baytown.

Injuries for the long struggle against tempest winds and battering water. Eight coast guard vessels gave the three survivors for lost last night after a thorough search of the sea where motor trouble forced the giant Bermuda-bound Imperial British Airways craft to pancake into the Atlantic ocean 300 miles southeast of Cape May, N. J., during a gale Saturday afternoon.

AMONG THOSE SAVED Niel Richardson, Navigator

Capt. M. R. Alderson, pilot of the 19-ton, $200,000 flying boat, who suffered more from shock and exposure than the others. Several were believed cut and bruised. Two tugs carrying supplies, fresh clothing, relatives, always officials and newspapermen were ready to steam down the channel and take the survivors—clad in borrowed sea togs—off the tanker.

TEXANS' PLACE IN CONGRESS

The real work of congress, as in the legislature, is done in committee. That is why committee memberships are so avidly sought, why state delegations and individual members fight tooth and nail for representation on committees.

Texas won some real victories last week when three members of its delegation in the lower house won important committee memberships. This section of the state fared very well indeed, for George Mahon of the 19th district landed a berth on the all-powerful appropriations committee while Charles South of Coleman was picked for a place on the interstate and foreign commerce committee.

Paul Kilday of San Antonio, freshman member who ousted Maury Maverick, gets an assignment to the military affairs committee—an appropriate gesture since San Antonio is headquarters of the Eighth Corps Area and one of the army's most important centers.

Earlier, another Texan, Milton West of Brownville, was named to the ways and means committee, which has the final say on most matters in the lower house.

The selection of Rep. South to the interstate and foreign commerce committee is of vital importance to West in his fight for revision of freight rates. The Coleman member will seek an end to discriminatory rates which are holding back the development of Texas and heavily penalizing Texas agriculture and industry.

With strong men on key committees, with a Texan presiding over the senate and two strong senators to represent Texas in the upper house, the Lone Star State will not be neglected in congress.

Texas members will carry a great deal of weight at this session. Man for man, it has the strongest representation of any state in the Union.

DEFENSE AGAINST TERRORIZATION

It is a curious thing that although the American people spend a large fraction of their national income for purposes of defense, there is almost no popular interest in defense problems and a lamentable lack of knowledge of them.

A bill was introduced into Congress on Wednesday which proposes to add 6,000 airplanes to the national army.

However, the statement by General Arnold, that we only intend to operate 3,000 of these planes, keeping the rest for training and reserves, must be taken into consideration.

Most military experts believe that 6,000 airplanes for operative purposes are excessive. Airplanes become obsolete; the servicing of them is extremely expensive, and there is always the danger that if we maintain too large a force in time of peace a retrenchment Congress will get sick of the cost and economize too radically.

This is what happened in France. In the early 1930s the French built up a huge air force; then there were labor troubles, a demand for increased social services and a resultant economy wave on armaments, and suddenly France found herself in a very bad position indeed. For an air force which had built once and for all it must go on being built all the time.

The most important single item in defense is to have a defense policy; to have that policy co-ordinated politically and militarily, and to have a continuing program for implementing it.

In the matter of air defense the most important thing is to have a sufficient number of planes to meet an immediate crisis—sufficient, that is to say, for an initial effort—and an airplane industry capable of rapid production and replacement.

The great advantage that the Germans enjoy in the air over the British and the French, for instance, is not that they have 10,000 planes eating their heads off on the various aviation fields.

That is to say, it is not an advantage to Germany, except for blackmail purposes or unless they intend to use them immediately. If they do not use them and use them soon their vast number will be a disadvantage, and that fact is known to military experts and gives other countries the jitters.

But from a long-range viewpoint, the great advantage which the Germans enjoy is a key and co-ordinated system of mass production by which they can make new planes faster than any other European power.

Therefore, in the matter of air defense, our great problem is to see that the air industry is given every possible assistance in preparing for rapid and efficient production.

We need immediately to create a joint selected committee from the Naval and Military Affairs Committees of both houses of Congress, supplemented perhaps by the most competent members of other committees dealing with appropriations, whose business it will be to go to the heart of principles of national defense and the co-ordination of those principles with our foreign policy.

For, in the world as it is today, we cannot afford to indulge in a foreign policy that we are not prepared to back up with force.

If we do indulge in it, we contribute immeasurably to the chaos in the world we diminish our own prestige and we subject ourselves to foolish and unnecessary risks.

Neither can we have a military policy without a clear foreign policy. Our armed forces must know what it is they have got to defend before they can plan efficiently.

Mr. Raymond Swing in an article published in "Ken" in September, said that our real policy is to be prepared to save the British empire in time of war. If it is, then we need a defense program way beyond anything we have yet contemplated, and we had better understand that we can exhaust in such an effort even the prodigious resources of this country. I don't think that any such idea is in the minds of the American people.

But even a minimum defense policy would, it seems to me, involve a great deal more than the demands of the pacifist groups that we prepare to protect our shores from the invasion of hostile troops.

International warfare today is carried on by terror, and the air weapon is the first instrument of

 by GEORGE TUCKER

NEW YORK—Rembrandt of a reporter wrecking an evening for Ferdie Grofe. It is about 9 o'clock America's foremost composer is congratulating himself on having a nice, quiet evening at home, with no interruptions—that's what he thinks.

Just as he prepares to tinker with a new novachord, a combination piano-organ with as many instruments and voices as a symphony orchestra, he has to answer the door-bell and let people in.

The Grofe living room impresses you as being mighty long. It sweeps the entire width of the house. At one end is an organ. At the other, like a twin instrument, is this new and untried novachord. Its panel board is as full of knobs and buttons as the switchboard of a trans-pacific liner. Its manufacturers want Ferdie to introduce it next month, and perhaps illustrate its use at the World's Fair. He doesn't know yet. He hasn't tried it. How can he find time to try anything when people keep drifting in through the front door?

Upstairs and off to the right is the Grofe den. It has a piano and this is where most of all those great compositions you know were written—Grand Canyon suite with its thinking, provocative "On the Trail" . . . Mississippi, with its nostalgic, romantic "Mardi Gras" . . . Hollywood suite, with its amusing, exciting "Preview" . . . You could name a list longer than a monkey's tail.

In this room is also a phonograph, and a musical library containing the recordings of all those Grofe presentations you know were written—Grand Canyon suite with its thinking, provocative "On the Trail" . . . Mississippi, with its nostalgic, romantic "Mardi Gras" . . . Hollywood suite, with its amusing, exciting "Preview" . . . You could name a list longer than a monkey's tail.

Hollywood

Sights And Sounds
 by ROBBIN COONS

HOLLYWOOD—W. Ray Johnston looked back today on 25 years of making bread-and-butter movies, and he found them good.

Johnston, a silver-jubilee at 47, will be toasted sometime in March by his associates in Monogram, but the actual anniversary of his entry into the movies is in January.

That was when he went from Iowa to New York, or from manulems to movies. He was 22, and he had a new mail-order dress suit made a job with the old Thalhouser film company, 45 minutes from Broadway, in New Rochelle.

As an employee of a many-faceted local firm in Waterloo, Iowa, Johnston had specialized in manulems. The movies maybe seemed more cheerful—but the important things is that he went, he wore his dress suit the night he arrived, he got to be a leading man, and today he's president of one of the few movie companies that never has had a "bad year."

"As an actor they said I belonged to the Immobile, Ala., school," he recalled today, "and they were right. If there lived a worse ham before or since, I've never seen him. I decided you didn't need an aggressive face behind the camera, and I've stayed there ever since."

The title of his first "starring" one-reeler was "His I.O.U."

And today—without a genuine "epith" in the list—his name is on some of the industry's biggest money-makers. Like other "independents," he is content to leave the "epic" to the majors—and to leave the gambling to them, too.

A couple of years ago Johnston's concern made a movie called "Boy of the Streets." (It's his theory, that a title with "boy" or "street" in it can't miss either, so this was a sure thing doubly.) Anyway, the picture lifted a waning Jackie Cooper back to a stardom that has earned him probably $100,000 since—about that brought up the question of stellar come-backs by the independents, which are often called the "burying-ground of stars."

"We get stars either on the way down, or the way up," he said. "And I think that stars have a good chance to come back with us—if they get the right vehicle. That's what makes them 'washed up' in the bigger studios. Under contract, they have to be used in pictures good or bad, and the star gets the blame for the bad pictures. At our studio there have been come-backs besides Jackie Cooper's. We got Mickey Rooney on the way up—for Hoosier School-boy." Ginger Rogers was in a lull when she made "The Thirteenth Guest" for us—she went on after that. Harry Davenport played for us before he hit his present great stride with the majors."

Other Johnston successes forthrightly: "Let the majors go wild on bids for current stage and book hits—we'll spend as high as $15,000 for a story, but have never spent more. (This figure went for the Gene Stratton-Porter hits.)

"If a picture can make an audience cry—and not just cry from boredom—the chances are nine out of 10 that it'll be a hit."

SMART DOG

CHARLESTON, S. C.—It's hard to teach an old dog new cars.

It looked like stubbornness when Coolie, a chow belonging to Malvern Halsey, jumped into a car parked in a curb and would not get out. He was ejected only by force after the owner drove to the police station for help.

Later they found why Coolie refused to leave—the car was formerly owned by Halsey, who sold it a few months ago.

All through the hours—for it is 2 o'clock now—his severest critic but stoutest champion, blond, lovely Ruth Grofe, his wife, has been coming in just at the right moment with just the right bits of refreshment. Some are in glass, others are on trays. She announces finally that hot biscuits and coffee and a huge salad ("Just something I got up hurriedly") are downstairs . . . We gorge ourselves but never stop talking . . . That is, we gorge, but Ferdie drinks only grape juice . . . Then he reaches the novachord. "See?" he says, turning a knob, and it sounds like a Hawaiian orchestra. He turns another knob and if you close your eyes you will swear it is a trumpet solo. There are violins and pianos, and human voices. There is a great open fire with crackling logs. There is drowsy well-fed contentment and the longing to just remain in one of those low, underlugging chairs for ever.

But after all, one can't do that—and hope to come back again. Sometime about 3 a. m. we are notably turning the car around, and heading back to New York. But Ferdie Grofe isn't going to bed. His coat is off and he is preparing to have what he has probably wanted all night—a real, uninterrupted whack at that new novachord. . . .

DANGEROUS SERVICE

Chapter Five
 Thick As Thieves
 by GRACE ELLIOTT TAYLOR

Peter looked across the table and winked reassuringly at Petronella. Knowing how many people she was grateful to her for making so little fuss about it. He admired her restraint. In her place he would have blurted out awkward questions at the outset; how often could they meet? How far was Kemmendine? Could he come to the Club this evening? Instead, unruffled she was asking about the riots. There were more important things they wanted to know.

"How are things here, father? We gathered from your last letters, and from the Captain, that you've had girks. What is the trouble exactly?" She left the rest of the pumping to Peter.

Probably, once she got going, socially, Peter had said, she would meet a crowd many more people than she did; knowledgeable people. Girls went everywhere in this country. They were spoiled and had their heads turned. It would be good for her to have to collect useful information for him.

"Burma for the Burmans is the cry," Colonel Mallone told his son. He was glad the boy looked like taking an intelligent interest in the country. It was to be encouraged.

"There was a party business in Cnatagong. There was a good deal of fighting. Women and children had to be taken aboard several B.L. ships. Things are quiet again there now. Here, in Rangoon, Burmans have been demanding that we shall have monopoly of the dock labor. At present the Cooringsha get most of it. They are quicker, cheaper, more reliable workers. But I think you have missed most of the excitement."

Petronella spoke casually: "A man called Mr. Merrit, on the ship, told me he thought the real trouble was only just beginning, father."

Colonel Mallone was impressed. "Oh, you met Merrit, did you? Well, he ought to know. But I'm surprised at him, talking to a girl like you, and scaring you about it. What did he say?" Astonishing, he thought petulantly. A fellow like Merrit would talk to his daughter, and tell her things he'd have given a lot to hear himself.

"That's the reason government officials talk to girls," she laughed. "They know it goes in one ear and comes out of the other. The troubles in the government of Burma seemed rather involved to me."

She lies beautifully thought Peter, who knew what Merrit had said. She was right not to tell father. Merrit had had a good evening in the bar, before he sat out that dance with Petronella.

"Never mind. If you're not too tired, you can drive with Peter to his bungalow, just to see where he's going to live. The driver will bring you straight back to rest, till tea time. You'll feel the heat, at first, after the ship. After tea I want to take you to see the Grants. You remember, they brought you home from India, when your mother died? They have a daughter out, Jean, about your age."

"We wanted to go to the Gymkhana Club to dance at six-thirty. We wanted to meet several of the people off the ship. They're going up-country tomorrow," Peter told him hardily.

"Before we all scatter," added Petrel sadly.

"You seemed to have arranged it already. But, of course, I know what it is—ship friendships. I'll take you along to the Gym myself, Petrel, and meet Peter there. Someone will give him a lift, I expect. But you're to come straight home to dinner when the dancing ends, at eight o'clock."

Less Pleasant Things

Petronella sat beside Peter in the back of the car, which took them through a squalid, crowded native streets to the Kemmendine Club.

This country might lay a spell upon him Peter thought. It was sunny and colorful. The Burmese had such smiling, honey-colored faces. The women dressed with such fragile, exquisite art. But there were less pleasant things to consider. This heat, which sent a stream of perspiration continually running down your spine. The dirty gutters, flies, and dust, of the meaner streets. The spattering of chewed betel nut, staining the ground. The beggars. The short paragraphs in the Rangoon papers, describing horrible murders, which seemed everyday affairs.

How many years would he have to spend here, he wondered? Would he be able to withstand the moral sol he feared? What would the other men at the chummy "cove" like? Would rice milling prove deadening or interesting occupation? Knowing his own restlessness, Peter was afraid. Merrit had said there was going to be a lot more trouble. That might prove fortunate for him. Something definite must happen, otherwise he might never write anything for Rowdon, and the Daily News.

The car turned in between unpainted gate posts, and jerked to a stop before a ramshackle looking old bungalow.

"Here we are, old girl." A servant came running down the steps and took his baggage.

"The rest are working I expect. I'll see you later."

He stood bareheaded, waving to Petrel, till the car swung out through the gates.

If it had not been for Peter's attitude towards the future, his desire to escape from Maller's Rice Mill at the earliest opportunity, Petronella would have allowed herself to love life in Rangoon. She was soon accustomed to being consistently bitten, to sleeping under a mosquito net. To the noisy Eastern night, with its croaking, bus-sing, droning, twittering chorus.

Petronella rode, swam, danced, played tennis, was invited everywhere. She went, wearing her best dress, and long white gloves to Government House, to dance with men in resplendent uniforms. Burma lay in the background of this European social life, like an attractive drop curtain. Had it not been for Peter, she might never have troubled, or wished to peer behind it. She might have evaded serious conversations upon the problems of the country. She might have discounted the rumors, and stories she heard, brushing them aside with uneasy laughter, because they were inconvenient threats against her pleasure. It was upon a typical Monday evening that her first real glimpse was forced upon her.

The Children's Corner

On Mondays they danced at the Gymkhana Club before dinner. She and Peter had formed what had become known as "The Children's Corner." This was composed of eight or nine girls, and twenty or so young men. They made a great deal of noise and enjoyed themselves. But "The Children's Corner," was unpopular with Colonel Mallone, since none of the older among Petronella's admirers liked to intrude, to ask her to dance.

"I hope you're coming home to dinner this evening," the Colonel asked, upon this day, petulantly.

"Peter and Colin have asked Jean and me to eat with them at the bungalow."

"You go down to that disreputable chummy of Peter's a great deal too often," he exploded irritably. "Peter is only just starting a new job and he ought to get on with it. He goes out much too much."

"But we do things very cheaply, always, father, and it doesn't affect his work."

"That isn't the only reason I'm annoyed, and you know it. If you'd been home, I should have asked Crampling to dine with us. He told me he tried to get a dance with this evening, but your program was filled. You're being extremely stupid, Petronella."

"We had breakfast with Mr. Crampling. You're always throwing that man at me. He's nice, but he's too old!" At this moment she wondered whether she hated, or loved Burma. Loved it, she supposed, most of the time. Until, as now, all her pride was raised in rebellion against it. If only she were free to live as she pleased! She would take a job in one of the offices, and set up house with Peter. She would commit a social offense, but she would be self-respecting, free. But it was unthinkable, father said. In Singapore, or in China, yes, but not in Burma, or India. He could not allow her to work. One was never free, when one was young and dependent.

This scene was a repetition of the one last week. It did not do any good to flare up, as she had done last time. To insist that she was willing to go home, if she failed to marry before he retired, to earn her own living. Her challenge only drew forth ugly warnings of inevitable failure, which shook her confidence, in spite of herself. Her father went on:

"I want you to make friends with them who could afford to support you. I'm not suggesting you should get married, or even engaged yet while you're too young. But you're getting into the wrong set. It will land you in a foolish, disastrous entanglement. I can only afford to keep you here, and entertain for you, for a year or so, until I retire."

Petronella understood his point of view, but disliked it, desperately. "I can't help liking them so much better, father, the younger people. I'm not in love with anyone."

"Well, you can go with Peter to-night, but you must see less of them in future," her father grumbled, temporarily mollified. "It's for your own good. You're too old to hang on to your brother as you do. You should have outgrown that childish hero worship." Hero worship! Of Peter, Petronella could not help smiling.

"You're as thick as thieves, the two of you." Poor father.

He was jealous, just as he had been in England. She was sorry. But Peter needed her, he always had.

When a series of officials turns up with speeches along the same lines, it is not likely to be pure coincidence. Purpose usually lies back of them.

Thus, the President said in his message to congress that he had virtually finished his program of social legislation, that the chief thing left to be done was a machining down of the tools of government which had been supplied by the last three congresses.

And now, department officials show up at widely scattered spots to use this portion of his message as a text. They predict that out of it will grow an invigoration resulting in a general improvement in business.

An AFL official said the amendments to be offered would embody principles approved by the federation convention last October. Major changes proposed include a requirement that the board must grant one craft or class of workers the right to select its bargaining representatives by majority vote and a limitation on the board's power to invalidate union contracts, coupled with a requirement that the board notify all interested parties before passing on a contract in dispute.

the proper vehicle in which this record should be made.

"It is obvious that the governor cannot personally do this work. I therefore recommend that the budget law be amended so as to create the office of director of the budget and making the director appointive by the governor and subject to his removal.

"At present, we have what I regard as an impossible situation; the board of control is charged with the responsibility of preparing the budget. This is subject to two criticisms and in making these criticisms I am in no sense talking about the personnel who compose the board of control. The first definite criticism is that preparation of a budget is not a proper task for an administrative board. It is a task for an executive and is so recognized by all sound budget authorities. The second criticism is that as presently constituted, the board of control is responsible for spending approximately $37,000,000 of state and federal funds each biennium. Certainly the department of government responsible for one of the large spending agencies is not a proper authority to prepare a budget.

"If we can so amend the budget law as to create a strong budget department it will, in my judgment, in years to come, reflect itself in millions of dollars of savings to the taxpayers of this state."

Hospital Notes

Big Spring Hospital

J. H. Everts, residing 17 miles northwest of Colorado, who sustained a broken leg just above the ankle last Friday morning when he fell from a wagon while hauling feed, was doing nicely Monday.

Mrs. J. R. White, wife of J. R. White, prominent farmer of the Knott community, was in the hospital for treatment of pneumonia. She is in a critical condition.

Mrs. James Waddie, 1809 Runnels street, was admitted to the hospital Saturday night for treatment. She is quite ill.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Thames, 1209 East Sixth street, a daughter, Monday morning.

Stephen Egan, Bethel, Conn., in the hospital for treatment of injuries sustained in an automobile accident two weeks ago, was slightly improved Monday.

Mrs. William T. Tate, was admitted to the hospital Sunday for treatment of sinus infection.

J. J. Dunlap, who sustained fracture of the left leg when struck by an automobile on the west viaduct December 29, was able to return to his home Saturday.

All Labor On Dam Project To Be Handled Through State Agency

Bombarded with applications for work on the dam construction jobs, city officials Monday requested all persons interested in securing employment on the project to register with the Texas State Employment Service.

"All labor on the jobs will be requisitioned through the employment service," said City Manager E. V. Spence. No employment could be promised at the city hall, he said, nor would it do any good to attempt a trip to the dam sites in an effort to contact contractors.

Considerable damage to private property had been reported in the lake area from persons, many of them seeking work or sales for their products, trying to get to the Moss Creek camp.

"Since there is not now any public road to the lake sites," said Spence, "damage is being done by persons who do not know the routes and who get lost trying to find the dams. The trips are useless, when job applicants can do far more good here by registering with the employment service."

County Agent Suggests A Game To Improve Extermination Of Rats

Farmers were advised today by County Agent O. P. Griffin to play a game of mental checkers with Brother Rat before exterminating him.

Indeed, the agent added, adroit maneuvering to overcome Brother Rat's inherent suspicions is the only sure way to get rid of him. For when it comes to dishing out poison, the rat apparently among one of his own ilk in the wood pile.

So it's wise to play a little game with him, said Griffin. This little game is called "prebait." It's just like tossing two eye strikes so that the next one burning down the middle will leave the batter standing.

The agent suggested that two or three kinds of bait, such as canned salmon, hamburger meat, etc., be put out to meet the individual tastes of the rodent colony. The meats, he said, should be mixed with a quantity of molast, corn meal. Generous portions should be left around recklessly for two or three nights to encourage Brother Rat's confidence in his new found meals. Some about even be wrapped, since a few old fashioned rats like to work for their food by gnawing through paper or a container.

Then skip one night, Griffin advised. This whets the appetites of the greedy rats. Next evening, stir in one ounce of red squill to each pound of food. The squill should be made into a paste before mixing.

Two to four pounds of bait should "knock 'em" cold in one night on most farms, Griffin believed. It might nauseate but not kill other animals. Of course more rats and mice will come on, for they always do around a farm. There's no use in trying to run them off, said the agent, just start playing mental checkers with them and end up with wholesale eradication and be rid of expensive and unwelcome boarders.

MARKETS Wall Street

NEW YORK, Jan. 23 (AP)—The stock market today suffered its sharpest break in more than 4 months as Wall Street's gloom over foreign developments deepened perceptibly.

Pivotal steels and motors tumbled at the start and dragged down other sections of the list. At the worst losses ranged from 1 to around 6 points generally with a few set-backs of as much as 9 or 10.

Occasional efforts at a rally met with little response. Transfers approximated 1,900,000 shares.

Touching off the relapse, brokers said, were reports Prime Minister Chamberlain would make a strong defense speech later in the day, and the eminent Spanish war crisis involving possible fall of Barcelona to the insurrectionists, with international repercussions feared likely. On top of this the German financial midday following the ousting of Reichstag Leader Dr. Schacht tended to dampen speculative sentiment.

Governor Silent About Sales Tax

AUSTIN, Jan. 23 (AP)—Governor Lee O'Daniel declined to comment today when asked if a retail sales tax would be an acceptable substitute to his proposal for a transactions tax.

He said he didn't know who would handle the transaction tax bill in the legislature, adding "the boys over there (meaning the senators and representatives) are running that."

Meanwhile, Joe Steadham, legislative representative for the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, who said he spoke for organized labor generally in Texas, denounced the transaction tax as a sales tax "under a different coat of arms" which would bear heaviest on people least able to pay taxes.

Hearing Promised On Denison Dam

OKLAHOMA CITY, Jan. 23 (AP)—Oklahoma delegates returned today from conferences at Washington with assurances the state would be given a hearing before work is begun on the Denison, Tex., dam and fies of the project began digging into its probable effects on the Red River valley.

Don Welch, Madill, speaker of the house who is strongly opposed to the $56,000,000 undertaking as is Governor Leon C. Phillips himself, said data on the value of land and property to be inundated were being assembled by tax assessors and county treasurers in the counties affected.

The book review "All This and Heaven Too," to have been given Friday afternoon by Mrs. W. J. Adams, has been postponed until a later date because of the illness of Mrs. Adams' father. The Philadelphia class of the First Methodist church is sponsoring the review.

Record Snows In N. Mexico

Highways Blocked, Mountain Communities Isolated

ALBUQUERQUE, N. M., Jan. 23 (AP)—A second record-breaking snowfall in as many weeks left New Mexico highways and mountain communities snowed in today.

Four national guard officers en route by army truck from Santa Fe to Roswell were marooned on U. S. 285, but rescued shortly before day break by a state patrolman who broke through to them. An unidentified boy was also taken out of a car on the same road and brought to safety.

Concern was expressed for 50 or 60 families at Rencona, a small community on the Glorieta mesa 60 miles northeast of Albuquerque.

Five Rencona farmers, who battled drifts all of Saturday to reach Albuquerque to seek aid in opening the highway to the little Saa Niguel county community, said there was an immediate need of food supplies which ran short after the blizzard of two weeks ago.

The British steamer Bramhill, 1,821 tons, crew of 30.

The Greek steamer Avra, 4,663 tons, crew of 35.

The Aconagua, en route to Liverpool from Valparaiso, messaged that her steering gear had been damaged by heavy seas. She gave her position as 200 miles west of the Irish coast. Two British tugs went to her aid.

The Tarkia sent an urgent message that gave her position as 200 miles off Land's End. The German motor tanker Paul Harneit, 90 miles away, changed her course to go to the Tarkia.

The Danish steamer Syend PIL also was approximately 200 miles off Land's End. She requested help and the British steamer Mannaar, 120 miles away, hurried to her aid.

In mid-Atlantic, the Netherlands Parkland reported she was leaking badly after heavy seas had cracked one of her 12-foot plates and three frames in the stokehold.

The steamer American Merchant picked up an SOS at 3:13 a. m. (8:13 p. m. Sunday, CST) from the Greek steamer Stamos, reported to be about 200 miles off the northern western tip of Spain.

The British steamer Terlingen, en route from Barry Roads to Bordeaux, drifted helplessly in the Bay of Biscay, her steering gear useless.

The gale, which at times reached 84 miles an hour, struck the coast of England last night and continued today.

At Saint Ives, Cornwall, a lifeboat, answering a rocket distress signal from a small disabled boat off the coast, set out at 3 a. m. in a rescue attempt. The life boat capsized, and seven of her eight members—who a year ago escaped a similar disaster—drowned. The disabled boat finally crashed on some rocks, losing her single crew man.

The British steamer Bramhill, 1,821 tons with a crew of 20 aboard, sent an SOS message, giving her position between Land's End and Ushant.

Chicagoan Injured As Car Overturns

Mrs. Jetta Reed of Chicago, proprietor of a dress shop in that city, was in Big Spring, hospital for treatment of a fractured pelvis sustained when the car she was driving nine miles west of the city overturned Saturday morning after a rear tire had blown out. In the car with Mrs. Reed at the time were Mr. and Mrs. A. Burkholder and daughter. Mrs. E. O. Desreux of Oak Park, Ill. The travelers were returning from Los Angeles, Calif., to their homes. They had spent the night in Midland. Mrs. Burkholder sustained an injured shoulder and back while Mr. Burkholder and daughter were unhurt. Mrs. Burkholder and daughter resumed their trip to Illinois Monday morning, while Mr. Burkholder remained here to be with Mrs. Reed.

NEGROES GOT MAD, SO DID POLICE

T. J. Smith and William McHenry, negroes, were reclining in the city jail Monday because T. J.'s aim was bad.

When they got in an argument over a woman Sunday at the Dreamland hotel, negro "hot spot," officers said the controversy reached a peak when T. J. produced a decrepit shooting iron.

He happened to miss William, who got mad when he saw a hole the gun charge ripped in the door. It made him so mad, said the police, that he turned on T. J. and gave him the equivalent of a country whipping.

All this disturbance made the police mad enough to relieve T. J. and William of their liberty.

COURT ACTIVITIES DELAYED HALF A DAY

Petit jurors for the fourth week of 70th district court were instructed to return at 1:30 p. m. Monday when court activities were delayed briefly during the morning as attempts were made to settle cases out of court.

District Judge Cecil Collins thought it probable that other cases might be called for trial during the afternoon.

The grand jury continued in session Monday and there was no indication from District Attorney Marjelle McDonald whether its deliberations would be concluded during the day.

One divorce case was heard Monday morning when G. W. Davis was given a divorce from Minnie Ole Davis and the community property divided.

ization as an emergency matter. Last week he submitted an astonishing transaction tax as an emergency.

"I assure you that I won't," he said.

"Last fall, after his election, there was a sensation when he said he had an 'open mind' on the matter of re-legalization. Advocates of legalized betting interpreted the comment as indication he might not oppose efforts to bring the ponies back to Texas as and a storm of criticism emanated from church organizations and others.

Some suggested his "open mind" statement was merely the slip of the tongue by a man not accustomed to press interviews.

"Do you still have an open mind?" A laugh.

"I don't want to go that far," he said.

Then he made his declaration about crime.

"I would not be in favor of any bill, no matter how much money it would raise," he said, speaking deliberately, "if it placed the state in partnership with crime."

"Do you consider betting on horse races a crime?" a reporter queried.

"Or anything that might be allied with crime, directly or indirectly," he said.

It was suggested that if horse race betting was legalized, it would not be a crime.

"No," he agreed.

Asked if he would approve a local option legislation measure, he commented he had nothing to say on that.

brought into court attended by guards in the presence of the special venire, and that such action was prejudicial to the defense.

Salazar was captured at Austin three days after the killing and since then has been shuttled between various West Texas jails. The case was sent here from San Angelo by District Judge John F. Sutton after difficulty in obtaining a jury. Judge Sutton arranged to exchange benches with Judge Albert S. Mauzey for the trial.

Home Production Of Food Stressed In Agent's Talk

Production of food for home use was urged upon farm families Monday by Lora Farnsworth, county home demonstration agent, as a means of bettering living conditions both from a monetary and dietary point of view.

"The production of food and feed on the farm for home use is the only way the farmers can make a liveable wage, because this contribution to the farm living will release cash for other purposes," said Miss Farnsworth in a radio talk over station KBST Monday. "There are, of course, some things which we may not be able to grow or produce, but these are in the minority."

She pointed to the savings in expenditures through providing surplus food supplies in growing a diet, important health factor, she said.

Children's SNIFLES

FOR Children's SNIFLES

SPARE your child much misery of the misery of sniffing, sneezing, and blowing (due to cold) by doing one simple thing. Insert a little Mentholatum in his nostrils. This soothing ointment will quicken sniffing and sneezing. It will help open his nostrils, enabling him to breathe more freely. Also rub Mentholatum on his chest, back, and neck tonight. This will stimulate circulation. Meanwhile, the medicinal vapors will circulate through the breathing passages as a further aid in clearing up mucus and soothing irritated membranes. You'll be glad to see how much better he feels.
