When the conference was over Eve departed, hoping she had missed no details of Barnes' plan. He sounded the buzzer for Arlene who passed Eve as she was leaving the office. The two girls exchanged stricken glances and Arlene raised her eyes upward.

Eve hurried to her desk tele and to assume a nonchalance they phone and called Dick's number. "Dick," Eve begged. "can you come down town and meet me at oints and Eve wondered what the City Bank at noon? It's very Eve gathered up several sheets the store dressed like a native then went to the sports goods de partment to lay plans for the June campaign. When she returned Barnes was standing at Arlene's desk, taking up the letters as rapidly as she transcribed them. Poor That act in itself was enough to make a stenographer nervous. It was just 12 o'clock Eve hurried out of the building to keep her appointment with Dick. She would have to wait until later to talk to Arlene.

> The front windows of Bixby's store were decorated with apple blossoms and there was a display of house and garden frocks, porch and picnic equipment furniture But Eve felt none of the urge of the spring time. She hurried across the square, oblivious of all passers-by. In another minute she must face Dick and ask him to give her $200. Yet her plans were not formulated and she scarcely knew how to plunge into all the explanations that would be necessary.

She entered the revolving door of the bank. And then she saw him! Dick's face lighted with a glad smile but Eve's froze in horror It was not because he was smoking his old briar pipe in a nonchalant manner. Here, in the midst of hurrying, well-groomed men and women, Dick had the temerity to be wearing his old slouch hat, bas gy trousers and blue flannel shirt And his coat had a streak of paint on one sleeve. What was more, he Eve thought rapidly. Barnes seemed entirely unconscious of his shocking appearance and was coming toward her.

"Dick!" Eve reproached him. "I didn't dream you'd come down "Well," he said easily, "there

By United Press

AUSTIN.-High school football teams in Texas set out this month for interscholastic league honors along a different route created by the adoption of a re-districting

Number of districts in the league has been increased from 27 to 31, according to Roy Bedichek, chief of the league bureau. District winners will meet in regional contests for eliminations. Entries for the state meet will be deternined by the regional games. Re-districting was dictated by the depression. Under the new plan, terms will not travel so far to play their schedule. Traveling expenses as well as the amount of school time devoted to inter-school contests are thus reduced.

The league also has adopted rule to prevent barring from fall competition those pupils whose schools closed early on account of financial difficulties. The new regulation supercedes the the "preceding semester rule" which has thinned the ranks of schoolboy athletes annually.
