Representative farmers from the various sections of Eastland county will meet unight at the county courthouse for the purpose of hearing the explanation of the way the market that has recently been assured for the marketing of Eastland county products will be operated.

A schedule of the crops that can be raised in the county for a profit and that can be easily handled through the market has been worked out by J. C. Patterson, county agent. This schedule gives the amount of seed needed to plant one acre of the various crops and the amount and kind of fertiliser that will be found most profitable in the noits of Eastland county.

An explanation of the drouth relief measure and the way in which the farmers of the county may obtain loans for the purpose of financing a new crop and for feed for the teams to be used in cultivating and harvesting the crops.

The committees has been in Abilene today to get instructions on the farm leans and will explain it to the committees from the rural communities, who in turn will call meetings in their neighborhoods and explain it in the farmers.

The following crops are recommended for Eastland county as profitable, and there has been a ready foreign market for these products.

CONTEMPT OF COURT.

Two recent cases in Texas point to a short-coming of the law as it fails to curb the unrestrained acts of public officials in contempt of court proceedings where the same man is both prosecutor and judge.

One case is Judge Fritz R. Smith's sentence of a Sweetwater newspaperman to three days in jail for publication of the truth concerning a grand jury's completed action. The man was released as soon as attorneys threatened to move for a habeas corpus writ.

Another was the action of a Fort Worth judge in sentencing the mother of a small child to jail for contempt of Borah. court because the mother refused to divulge the whereabouts of the girl, fearing it was to be taken from her.

Contempt of court sentences grow out of two kinds of matters. One is acts within the presence of the court, tendcases, normally a judge should retain authority to command order and respect for his court. But, instead of summary commitment to jail, anyone so penalized should have time, as a matter of right, to secure counsel, and should have a hearing, and liberty on appeal, if appeal is taken.

The other kind, brought sharply to attention by Judge Smith's action at Sweetwater, is a judge's infliction of jail penalties for acts committed outside the courtroom, which in the judge's opinion constitute contempt. There is now no time limit as to what a judge may construe as contempt. Of course a person in jail may hire a lawyer, and appeal to a higher court for writ of habeas corpus. But the poor man without a lawyer is without the protection the judge is supposed to represent.

The just judge deserves protection as well as the citizen, by curtailment of this unlimited present exercise of arbitrary power. Judges are guided to exceptional degree by precedent; and the just judge often follows a precedent which may have been established on an unworthy basis in venting the human spleen or appeasing the jealous dignity of a pompous person.

many years in the state service. He has been a lawmaker He was a member of the state pardon board. He is an upright and honorable man with a fine record of public service

Yet he, finding the unlimited authority on the books, and precedents to guide him, performed a judicial act that he did not care to submit to the test of review by another judge. The remedy in this second type of contempt sentence is

A judge should have to file a complaint and take the case before some disinterested tribunal. That is all it would take. That would give the accused person a hearing and a trial, and would leave the decision to another person than the prosecutor.

This subject, brought sharply to public attention in the Sweetwater case, should have legislative attention on its merits.

GASOLINE & MOTOR OILS

OLD-FASHIONED COURTESY

When you drive into an Humble station, a smiling uniformed service man comes alertly to attention and greets you with a cheery "What can I do for you, sir?"

In addition to supplying promptly the things you ask for, he fills the radiator --- wipes off the windshield and headlights --- inquires about your motor oil --- offers to check your tires and fill your battery with distilled water --- gives you, along with the road information you request, a handy road map --and a parting "Thank you!"

He is but evidencing the spirit that is found throughout the Humble organization ... a spirit of old-fashioned hospitality, courtesy, and friendliness that earnestly desires to make your motoring as pleasant as possible.

Further evidence of this wish remains with you long after you have left an Humble station. In the smooth, efficient performance of Humble Gasoline and Motor Oil is reflected the character and integrity of the entire Humble organization.

Iowa Planning Eighth Annual Husking Derby

DES MOINES, Ia., Jan. 20-Grun y, Ia., center of the country's agricultural belt next fall will be the scene of the eighth annual naional corn-husking championship ontest and entries from addition states today promised a record

Plans already have been made to eccommodate 50,000 spectators the 1931 event in which Fred Stanck, Webster County, Ia., is expected to defend the title he won last Nov. 14 at Norton, Kan. Selection of a field will be delayed until

The event started eight years world-hear him roar. ago when Henry A. Wallace, editor ____ publication, entered into an argument with an old farmer over how much corn a "good hand" could busk, has grown to nation-wide prominence. The 1922 husking bee promoted by Wallace, drew only farmers living near here. Now it is known as the "Corn Belt Derby."

Last year's contest at Norton was sheld in a section of Kansas untouched by the drought. The field had an average yiele of, 60 bushels to the acre and more than 35,000 persons saw the event. They saw Stanek husk 30.34 bushels of corn in the alloted 80 minutes to win nis fourth title. He was victor in the contests of 1924, 1926, and 1927. of Wallace's farmer, a Des Moines

Students Pay MAX FACTOR'S College Way TOILETRIES

DETROIT, Jan. 20-More than $200,000 was earned during the 1920-30 term by students in two of the colleges of the University of Detroit, according to a survey made by the university's employ-This amount was earned by 455 arts and commerce students who were working to pay ail, or part of the expenses of their education. The survey covered less than half of the student body. "Working one's way through coi-lege is no social stigma here." the survey bulletin said. "In all our departments we find the leaders of student activities, class presidents and organization heads, are parttime workers. "Among the strongest ideals o this university, is the desire make higher education possible for wortby young men, equipped with character and mentality though mited tinancially."
