

Visitors Swarm To Austin For Inauguration

KEEPING THROUGH THE KNOTHOLE WITH BILL MAYES

There is a newspaper story that the publisher who tried for months to suspend publication could not do so because each had to get out a paper correcting the mistakes made the day before. There may be some truth in the story at that. Friday we wished a little story that came from the county capitol stating that the 91st district court had adjourned until Jan. 20. Or maybe Jan. 30. We will correct this mistake right here. Now, we think the story should have been that the 91st district court had recessed. Some failed to write the words "recessed" in the copy and so we didn't know any better until after the paper had come out. Then we turned a couple of Ruford Tunnell's freight cars into passenger trains, which had him some consternation.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Sheila Shayne, whose parents were well known vaudeville entertainers, is in New York looking for a job. Sheila is a dancer. After much discouragement she is hired to substitute for Daisy Gleason, another dancer, who has sprained an ankle. While rehearsing at Joe Paris' song show Sheila meets her lover Lane and Dick Stanley, rich and socially prominent. Dick urges Lane to include Sheila in the program of entertainment at a party he is giving. Sheila declines but Dick comes to the theater later and persuades her to come.

At the party she meets several celebrities, including Gordon Mandrake, well known producer. She sees Dick frequently during the next few days and he tells her Mandrake is interested in her and is going to offer her a part in a play. However, Mandrake does not do so.

In a few weeks Daisy Gleason is able to dance again and Sheila is again out of a job. She makes the rounds of the agents' offices without results. Then Mandrake telephones and offers her a part in his new play.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XIII

The part Mandrake offered Sheila was a job—but a disappointing one as well. The new play, "When Lights are Low," contained a minor part in which there was an opportunity for specialty dances. There were a few lines, too, Sheila didn't mind learning lines but she did—tremulously—object to these.

"How can you look so innocent and say such things?" the juvenile asked her when, at the first rehearsal, Sheila stumbled through the part.

Sheila nodded and blushed. She was grateful for a friendly word because rehearsal, when parts are first assigned and possibly not permanent, is the coldest spot on earth. She had never seen this juvenile before. He was a young man with striking blond hair. His profile, however, was manly and clear-cut and his mouth rather sweetly wistful.

Sheila shook her wise little head and told herself she hoped the girls wouldn't spoil him. But they would, of course. The first matinee was to bring him a load of cash notes.

"I hope they'll change those lines," Sheila told him nervously. "Why don't you ask them to?" he suggested. "Maybe they don't know you object."

He looked so innocent that Sheila decided he was not joking. She was sitting on a scenic rock, swinging her little feet in her tap shoes.

"I guess you are rather new to Broadway, aren't you?" she asked. The young man considered, head bent slightly to one side. "Aren't you?" he countered.

She laughed gayly. "That was the answer I deserved. And my answer to that is, 'Yes' and 'No.' I'm new to a part in a Broadway show but not new by any means to the ways of Broadway. Nor to tripping the streets looking for a job." She shuddered, half in earnest, half playfully. "Even in summer this street's the coldest in the world. Worn shoes, head aching from sleepless nights of worry."

"That must be terrible," he said simply, as one speaking of something he would never personally encounter.

"You mean you don't know how hard it is to find a job?" It was Sheila's turn to stare.

"I mean just that. This job found me. I dare say I was lucky—if you look at it that way. Unlucky if you look at it another. If I don't go over big—that is, big enough to warrant staying here in New York—I've sort of spoiled my taste for the village. Don't you think?"

"It depends upon the village," Sheila said uncertainly. Was this young man kidding her? Certainly no village youth could have such an air, such self-confidence or such a wardrobe. His clothes were expensive, well cut.

"There are two villages. One is New Haven and the other a suburb of Boston."

"And a certain village known as Paris and another called London tossed in!" Sheila added.

He laughed gayly. "Is my bitter past as evident as that? I say, let me introduce myself. You are Sheila Shayne, I know, for when you were dancing I heard some one say so. Well, my name is Jim Blaine. I suppose they'll change it on the program, provided I ever get that far. That's not flossy enough. Meanwhile I want to call you Sheila if I may. So why not try Jim?"

"Oh—Shayne!" a raucous voice interrupted them. "Do you think this is a pink tea? That's your cue?"

"My fault," whispered Jim, shamefacedly rising from the bit of scenery where he had been seated at her feet. "Never mind that old bozo. He raises you when you aren't around!"

"I may not be around tomorrow if he changes his mind," Sheila whispered back.

The pianist, a slender, bent young man in shirt sleeves who appeared completely bored, again struck the music cut. Mike, the owner of the voice, stopped back, spreading his hands to clear a group of inquisitive ladies of the ensemble from underfoot. "Da-da-da!" he hummed, swinging an authoritative forefinger.

Sheila translated herself instantly into liquid motion. She had learned the routine in half a dozen painstaking sessions with Bill Brady who had gone to some length to inform her that they were not paying him extra to teach her the steps, nor would he dream of doing it for anyone but her.

Bustle and scurry everywhere. Costumes completed and packed by short-tempered wardrobe mistresses, scenery shipped, the arrangements for the company's transportation made final.

Jim Blaine offered to drive Sheila down in his car. She wasn't certain this was a wise plan either for herself or him and finally he decided to go in the train with the rest of the company.

The great night arrived at last. The show went off beautifully. Critics praised it abundantly. "They noticed you. Did you see that?" Jim asked Sheila over the telephone next morning.

Sleepy-eyed, she laughed. "I haven't seen the papers." "And you're dying to know what they said about you but wouldn't ask for the world?" Jim went on. "Well, here goes!" He read, "A certain little newcomer to the terpsichorean ranks—"

"Why, I've been dancing for years!" Sheila protested. Jim continued. "—Sheila Shayne, handled the part of Sally in an urbane and delightful manner. Marion Randolph, who was adequate, had best look to her laurels!" "Adequate—wow! Did they say anything about you?" "Plenty!" "Read it to me, will you?" "Meet me for breakfast and I'll let you read it for yourself." They were very merry half an hour later in the hotel breakfast room. Then, at Jim's direction, the waiter brought the newspapers.
