TEXAS AS A PRODUCER OF WOOL AND MOHAIR

A bulletin issued by the federal department of agriculture lets it be known that world production for 1933 will be considerably smaller than last year "despite its estimate of a slightly higher production in the United States attributed largely to Texas." Moreover, the small increase in production this year was largely the result of increased production in the Lone Star commonwealth, since production in other states was not greatly different from that of 1932.

In Texas, the bulletin went on, a large number of sheep were shorn with a greater average weight per sheep. As to mohair, the department found production had declined because of heavy losses of both goats and kids in Texas this spring. This prediction is made by the department: San Jose high school senior, the at the next State Fair. "The tendency in Texas, if prices remain at about present levels, will be to expand numbers at least to the 1931 level. As to mohair, the report mentioning a phenomenal price advance to Texas growers from eight cents in the fall of 1932 to 40 cents in the fall of 1933 warned that "producers should not assume prices comparable to those will be maintained until stocks are materially reduced."

Texas leads all the commonwealths in the production of wool. Texas leads all in the production of mohair. In Wyoming and Montana and other states producers of wool and other states producers of wool itis a hundred lays between frost and frost. In Texas there is an open winter and the climatic advantages are a guarantee that the Lone Star commonwealth will continue in the years to come the largest producer of wool and mohair. It is a matter of history that when Grover Cleveland was president of the United States the tariff laws of a democratic congress almost destroyed the wool industry in the Southwest. Vermont at the time was a heavy producer of wool for a small, state. Well, the sheep industry perished in Vermont. South American and Australian wool producers played havoc with the American producers of the fleece taken from the backs of the sheep and the goat.

FRECKLES and HIS FRIENDS-By Blos

COWS TO WEAR FURS California State fair for the fin- FORT ATKINSON, Wis .- Stan-

THE ANTILLES

President Grau San Martin has another revolution on his hands. To quell it he has declared martial law and the courtmartial of any newspaper director who publishes news of an alarming nature. American investment bankers and sugar speculators have a total investment of a billion dollars in Cuba, including the huge loans made to the Machado administration for public works projects in other years. Great sugar plantations are covered with liens. Machado and his grafters held high carnival for a time. Now Cuba is a bankrupt nation, rival chieftains of political organizations are in open revolt, and the end is not in sight. Cuba should have been annexed, or rather made a territorial possession of Uncle Sam's when the Cubans were given their freedom in the closing days of the Spanish-American war.

It must at least be admitted that some bankers whose life work has been the study of economic conditions know their business equally as well, if not better, than quite a number of our politicians.

EDWIN S. FRIENDLY, chairman of the Bureau of Advertising A. N. P. A., and business manager of the New York Sun, says:

"Newspaper advertising is often called 'the medium of action.' That is because the merchant or the manufacturer who employs it in his business feels its response almost immediately.

"Some advertising arouses interest-perhaps desirein the mind of the customer. Newspaper advertising goes farther by creating a demand; by bringing the person interested right to the counter to see the advertised merchandise.

"This is not strange. Newspapers deal with things in action, with what is happening today and will happen tomorrow. A headline sets the whole world talking. A name in the news column becomes a household word between days. Millions are stimulated to think, to talk, to act by the day's news; every page vibrates with things in motion.

"This impulse communicates itself inevitably to the advertising columns. Readers in such an atmosphere are susceptible to action. It is an axiom that 'Newspaper advertising never lets a prospect get cold.'

"The newest thing in the world is news-news of people, news of places, news of business, news of merchandise. All this the great reading public finds in the newspaper. All this helps to make newspaper advertising the life blood of trade."
