HOME LOAN MEASURE ON THE WAY

Democratic house leaders made certain an amendment objectionable to the party in power "did not get into the home loan bank bill." A reminder that the senate had put such an amendment in the bill declaring that party affiliations should not be considered in selecting employees for the corporation. Well, the senate amendment was tossed aside. There was only one dissenting vote—Rep. Kennedy of New York. Republican leaders declared they would make a party issue if the senate bill was not enacted in its entirety. It is largely a question of spoils. Democratic members insisted that democrats should be given the preference in the naming of employees of the home loan setup the nation over. Republicans wanted a free-for-all in the selection. When the reins of government are held by the republicans, republicans are given the plums. This is a long time record of republican control of the nation. Now the democrats are in control and there are thousands of hungry democrats who are clamoring for "loaves and fishes of victory."

The senate as well as the house measure guarantee the principal as well as the interest of bonds issued by the home loan corporation. Most house members, it is said, believed the senate would send the bill to conference and the house later would accept "the non-partisan stipulation which had the endorsement of the President of the United States when the senate measure was framed and adopted and then sent to the house of representatives. "Since the close of the war between the states three democrats have been called to th office of chief magistrate. Many republicans have been called to that office. All republicans were governed by the policy enunciated in the early history of the republica that "to the winners go the spoils of office."

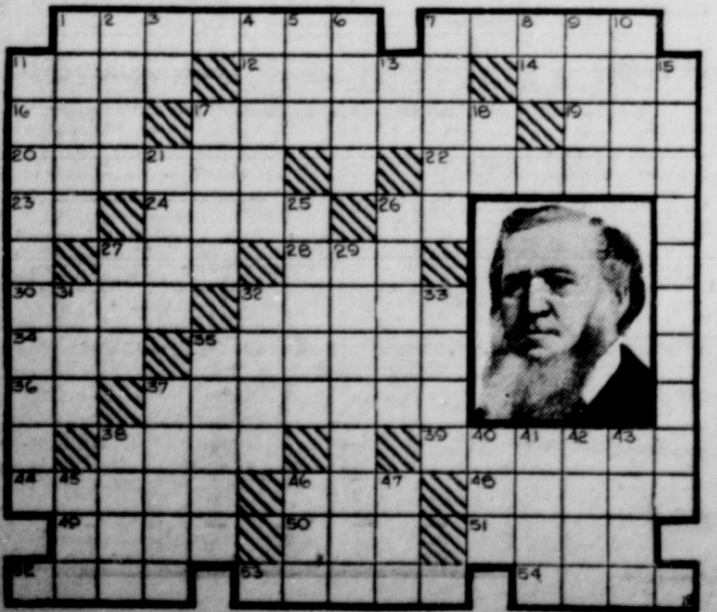

Why the late day hypocrisy on the part of the trainers of the elephant—a political emblem of the dead party of Lincoln, an animal that has been going on two instead of four legs since the coming of the third revolution in American political history in the year of our Lord 1932?

'FIRST OF ITS KIND IN AMERICA' ON THE WAY

The congress may order a recess for May 15. To see how widely electricity rates vary throughout the country the national solons ordered an investigation by the federal power commission, which, incidentally, will show the difference in prices charged by publicly and privately owned companies. The inquiry will be the first of its kind in America. Sen. George W. Norris of Nebraska is responsible for the inquiry. He is the author of the resolution directing it. He described it as one of the most important measures to come before congress. Copy-making is the order of the day. A nation-wide election will take place in the coming month of November. "Let the people rule."

Texas Federation

sales for the special shows of the day. The personnel of the committee is: Mrs. James F. Welder of Fortoria; Mrs. Clyde A. Lilly, Fort Worth; Mrs. Harold Abrams, Dallas; Mrs. Sam Cox, Maria; Mrs. J. W. Fincher, Houston; Mrs. Volney W. Taylor, Brownsville; Mrs. Greenleaf Fiske, Abilene; Mrs. W. P. Avriett, Lamesa, and Mrs. Sam Smith, Austin. The clubhouse here is an imposing structure in which are centered the activities of more than 30,000 clubwomen of Texas. It bears a mortgaged indebtedness that has created a problem during the depression years. Executives of the Federation were highly optimistic of the success of the ticket sales for the shows, which are being presented throughout the state as a means of raising necessary funds. They were loud in their praise of Karl Hertzelle and other theatre artists active in the movement. "A new relationship between the theatre and the public is of this magnificent offer of Hobbittzelle and others in the theatrical business," said Mrs. T. in a statement. "This glorious distance from the theatres is giving every woman's organization the state joyous and is spreading them on the sale of tickets on the theatres on 'Woman's' The movement marks a new in community work." While theatres have arisen to such emergencies as storm and other disaster this is probably the first time record that the entire amusement structure of the state has a share of its receipts to contribute public work of state character and scope.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

PABITO a handsome youth of a murder he did not commit, escapes from Key West in Havana with two thieves, PAUL and LOTTE. MARCIA TRIGUERA who could prove Pabito innocent, fears scandal and remains silent.

In Havana Pabito, under the name of "Juanito," becomes acquainted as a boxer and later opens a gymnasium.

Pabito loves ESTELLE FIELD, teacher of rock JIM FIELD, and she loves him. They meet and plan to marry but Field takes Pabito on a yachting cruise. Two years later, believing Pabito lost to her, she becomes engaged to ALFRED DAVIDS.

SIR ROBERT, a titled Englishman and Pabito's father, has been carrying on a search for him, employing WILLING, New York detective.

Following Estelle's faithless, Pabito spends months in similar travel and then returns to Havana where he is warmly welcomed by her.

Meanwhile Field has lost her fortune. David breaks his engagement to Estelle and she and her father decide to go to Havana.

GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XII

THE Noyes case absorbed Marcia Treadway. She knew that Pabito had lived with Noyes and now of course, Noyes would step out of hiding to claim the fortune that was his. He could, no doubt, tell her where to find Pabito. Once she found the youth, Marcia had resolved that she would tell the truth and free him from the old charges.

No longer did Marcia dream of making Pabito dependent on her—trips to France and Spain and Italy. She wanted instead to say, "This is the truth I owe you and must tell to set my mind at rest." Her maid found her surprisingly glad these days. Marcia no longer became harsh at the slightest interference with her will. "Ah, well," she thought, smiling, "I've traveled a long way." She thought of those years during which she had planned to shield Pabito and herself. She now knew that she could shield him only by the truth and that with the truth she must tear from herself the protection that sheltered her from the world's scorn.

The Noyes case filled her columns in the newspapers. There were many stories about Josie Martell who had danced and acted with the much charm and grace. "Another Maude Adams" she had been called.

Staid middle-aged men smiled, reading this column, and then signed a little sadly. A look over the shoulder is likely to cause a frown, while a look ahead makes the muscles tense. And in middle age one does not look ahead so easily as one looks behind.

NORRIS NOYES' wife had confessed that she killed Josie Martell. In the midst of the confession she had lost consciousness and had been revived by drastic measures. Then, gasping and holding off the chill finger of death by sheer will power, she finished what she had to say—the story she had kept secret since the night her husband had taken a revolver from her hands to say, "Go!"

Mrs. Noyes had been jealous, she confessed. Her jealousy had grown until it completely overpowered her. She knew no other emotion, she had followed her husband one night to Jose Martell's home which was well uptown. A maid admitted her and she saw the maid disappear into the hall she the house. Then from the rear of the house she heard the door open. It was Jose Martell's voice and Noyes. They were talking of pictures and that could possibly offend Mrs. Noyes. She went into the room then and Jose Martell arose to make her welcome. But Mrs. Noyes did not sit down. She stood in the doorway, smiling. Then she raised one hand, holding the small Spanish revolver that she always kept in her dressing table drawer. She fired.

When she next knew anything beyond her husband's swift, gently voiced, "Go!" she was on her way home. She let herself in with her key. The testimony of Jose Martell's maid that a woman had called that night, see her mistress was dismissed as unimportant after Noyes' disappearance had been interpreted as a confession.

Mrs. Noyes had had one letter from her husband after that. He wrote her that he had never been faithful to her physically. His interest in Miss Martell had been no more than a friendship based on mutual interests. Nevertheless he was guilty, Noyes said, because he had led his wife into loving him and later ceased to care for her. He also wrote that he was not coming back, that she must rear their son as best she could and with the realization that the crime was his, no hers.

MRS. NOYES' confession, delivered through deep gasps, was complete. Perhaps it was a relief at last to speak. Beyond doing justice to her husband and delivering the money to him that was his—if he could be found—the confession made little difference. The son whose rearing had been left to his mother was one of those reported "missing" in France. Perhaps the boy had been urged to a gallant duty by thoughts of a father who had killed a woman and run away.

Thus are the patterns of life woven.

At the same time there was also much space in the newspapers devoted to accounts of Jim Field's spectacular financial crash. There had been a drop in the market that took him under, leaving him completely at the mercy of men whom he had betrayed. These men—settling on the little that was left—beat their red, rough necks to pick the bones, as their feathers grew sleek and shiny.

Estelle's pictures were printed widely, one of them bearing the caption, "Deserted by Lover After Father's Failure."

Before leaving for Havana Estelle had learned of the crash. She had received a letter from Alec David's the morning of their departure. Alec wrote, as cruelly as possible, that their engagement must be at an end. He said that he knew she had never cared for him. He had not cared for her either until he had determined to show her who was master. Then somehow he had learned a blend of love and hatred—a wish to love her as he dreamed of loving her and a wish to hurt her as men rarely dream of hurting women.

"Of course," his mother had drawn watching him write the note, "it is quite impossible now. And after all that—The words ended with a raise of pudgy shoulders.

"Oh surely!" Alec agreed in a guile.

It was like Estelle to pull him into a mess like this, he thought. To make him love her and hate her and then leave him unable to fulfill the least of his morbid and cruel fancies. Yes, it was like her.

MARCIA came down to the pier to see the Fields off. The place was thick with a salt tang that had been carried into the big barn like structure by the fog of the gray day.

"You're lucky to be out of this you two!" she said, pulling her fur coat closely around her throat. "I wish I were leaving with you!"

She had decided it would be kinder to act as though nothing whatever had happened.

"Better come along!" Field invited with a weak echo of his old hospitality.

"I'd love to but unfortunately I have an important luncheon engagement. It's with a young man who writes poems to me and all that kind of thing. Estelle, you're rather lightly dressed, aren't you? It's such a fearful day. The jonquils in the florists' windows are positively insulting, aren't they?"

Suddenly she became silent and slipped her arm through Jim Field's. He was surprised at her touch. Marcia was reputed to be a "cool one." She had always had that reputation except at that one time when she was said to have cared for Ted Jeffries.

"Jim," she went on quickly, "I have a story to tell you. It's far too ribald for this child's ears. Come along down here a little way and I'll narrate the naughty thing."

He walked with her, disinterestedly. Field had felt numb ever since the first threat of his loss had come to him with a drop of stock he had thought to be untouchable.

"I had a funny feeling just then," Marcia confided when Estelle was out of hearing. "Odd, isn't it, how we Americans use the word 'funny' in the wrong sense so often?"

"Yes," Field agreed. He wondered why she was sparring.

"Well," she went on, "I had this—odd sensation because I realized I have never asked you about someone of whom I want very much to hear. You know a good many things—too many, you know—and you might know this. If you do you must tell me. You must—"

"Do you know what's become of that boy who used to work for you—the one named Pabito? The one who lived with Norris Noyes?"

"What makes you ask?"

"I want to know, Jim. It's important!"

Revolving Stage Built at Ft. Worth

By United Press

FORT WORTH.—A revolving stage, believed an innovation in dramatic theatricals in Texas, will be introduced here by Blanchard Hiles, well-known Fort Worth actor and former director at Taso and Dallas.

The revolving stage, it is believed will be the only one in Texas. The nearest one in Texas, it is thought, is that of the Municipal Opera in St. Louis, Mo.

Use of the revolving stage will eliminate delay between scenes. When a scene or act has ended, the stage is turned on an axis, immediately bringing the next scene, already set on another sector of the stage, into play.

McKee is directing the Community Theatre here, an independent organization which he created himself after leaving the Fort Worth Little Theater as director.

As director of the Waco Little Theater in 1929 his play "Sun Up" was awarded the title of the best amateur production in Texas for that year. He came to Fort Worth in 1932 from Memphis, Tenn., where he directed amateur theatricals.

WASHINGTON.—Closest rival of Secretary Ives in multiplicity of jobs is Henry A. Wallace, who sits in the chair of the secretary of agriculture and looks directly across the room at a portrait of his father, who once held the same job.

Wallace, too has had added to the regular burdens of the post a number of crushing New Deal responsibilities. First, the responsibility for the entire Agricultural Adjustment Administration is upon him, with all its broad and shifting range of processing taxes, crop limitation, marketing agreements, and export arrangements.

He must carry a share in the work of the Commodity Credit Corporation, the Federal Surplus Relief Corporation, the Public Works Administration, the Federal Employment Stabilization Board, the Federal Board for Vocational Education, and the National Forest Reservation Commission.

The are all highly important and require more or less active attention.

Less demanding are his memberships in the usual Executive, Emergency, and National Defense Councils. Being chairman of the Migratory Bird Conservation Commission probably doesn't take much time, nor his membership in the Smithsonian Institution, Puerto Rican Hurricane Relief Commission, or Chicago World's Fair Centennial Commission. But they're nominally responsibilities.

If ever a man was specially qualified and trained for a job, it is Wallace. Born on a farm, he spent his life not only at practical farming, but at the broader aspects of the farm problem, both as editor of farm papers, and student and author of books and charts on specific farm problems.

He has developed systems of forecasting corn yields, developed highly specialized strains of corn, hogs, and chickens, and taken part in many movements to aid farm life.

Wallace is rather shy in manner with a most attractive, almost boyish smile. He is only 46 years old, dresses neatly and soberly, and though he retains and runs his farm in Iowa, he lives in the capital with his family in one of its largest hotels.

"AS HUSBANDS GO" AT LYRIC TOMORROW
Warner Baxter, topping his triumphs in "Penthouse" "Paddy" and "42nd Street," comes to the screen of the Lyric Theatre Wednesday in Fox Film's latest release "As Husbands Go." The film taken from Rachel Crothers' successful Broadway play, Miss Crothers who has given us "Let Us Be Gay" and "When Ladies Meet" has again written a play that is recorded as human, real and enjoyed.

The picture is described as a romance for women that men will like. It deals with the wife who is undecided whether or not she should give up a devoted husband for what at the moment appears to be a glamorous, new romance. While on a pleasure jaunt in Paris, she becomes infatuated with a young Englishman. Before departing for home she promises to divorce her husband so that she "As Husbands Go." At home, her husband's chrymne manners and devotedness prove too much of an obstacle for her to overcome. The young Englishman's arrival makes the situation more embarrassing. Discovering that the young man is the one his wife loves, the husband proceeds to discover what type of man he is. A strong friendship is formed between the two, and the young man's admiration for the husband becomes so great that he decides to depart and leave well enough alone. The wife realizing her mistake tries to confess to her husband, but he sympathetically overlooks her understand, and refuses to let her sell, as they find a new happiness together.

It is reported that Warner Baxter, in the leading role, gives an inspiring performance. Helen Vin-

Quake Forecast Device Is Tested

By United Press
BERKELEY, Cal.—Earthquake predicting devices, which, it is hoped, may enable scientists to foretell earth movements hours before they occur, are being tested at the University of California.

Patterned after a Japanese invention, the instruments are designed to measure infinitesimal tilting of the earth's surface, which Japanese seismologists claim they have noted before earthquakes.

The devices have been installed near the Hayward fault line along the lower slope of the Berkeley hills.

Since the instruments were installed, there have been no movements of any magnitude along the fault, Prof. Perry Byerly, U. S. seismologist, said, and even if it should be proved that tilting is a precursor of earthquakes, years might be required to work out a technique of forecasting, he believes.

Some tilting has been observed on the instruments, but it has been attributed to rains and consequent swelling and movement of the surface.

The instruments were designed by George E. Merritt, formerly of the U. S. Bureau of Standards, and were installed by the U. S. Geodetic Survey. Tilting is detected by observing the movement of oil held in a bowl, over which a plate of glass is suspended parallel to the oil's surface.

If tilting occurs, the surface of the oil is no longer parallel to the plate of glass. Even though this change may be too slight to be observed by the naked eye, it can be determined by reflecting a beam of light simultaneously from the lower surface of the glass and the top surface of the oil.

When the two surfaces are exactly parallel, the light is reflected without interference, but if the oil has moved in relation to the glass, some of the light waves interfere with each other and a pattern is formed.

FALCONS INDICATED RANK

By United Press
NEW YORK.—When sportsmen of today go forth to hunt or fish they wear large badges on their coats. In olden days when hawking was the rage, the sportsman's badge was his falcon, and the rank and station of the hunter was firmly fixed by the kind of hawk he used, according to John T. Zimmer, associate curator of birds at the American Museum of Natural History. Largest of the hunting hawks, the Goshawk, was the regal bird of the king. The female Peregrine was used by earls; the Merlin by princes; the Hobby by women, and the Hobby by the squires. Yeomen, of old, could only hunt with the Goshawk, while persons of lesser degree hunted with the Kestrel.

Watch For Fur Planes

By United Press
MONTREAL.—Game wardens throughout the province of Quebec have been ordered to be on the lookout for poachers who use airplanes to transport illegally-trapped furs from Canada into the United States. Issued by the fish and game branch of the department of colonization, game and fisheries here, the orders ask that wardens watch for any suspicious airplanes, which, according to reports, fur dealers in the United States, are preparing to charter to fly into the north and purchase pelts from woodsmen, who have continued to trap fur-bearing animals after the official trapping season was closed.

Women Drivers Are Barred From Races

By United Press
WASHINGTON.—American women are barred from participation in automobile races, although the American Automobile Association conceded, their carriage is inestimable.

Hundreds of American women, the three "A's" attested, have applied for permission to participate in speedway competition. However, it was explained, feminine entries in United States races are not accepted by the Contest Board of the association, governing body of the sport.

Entries of women drivers are accepted in European countries, the association disclosed.

Farmers Are Warned To Watch Weights On Cotton Bagging

By United Press
AUSTIN.—State Agricultural Commissioner J. E. McDonald warns Texas farmers that they are being imposed upon in the weight of cotton wrapping (bagging) furnished in some parts of the state.

Bagging which weighs two pounds per yard or 12 pounds per six yard pattern long has been standard. Now some gins are putting out 10 pound bagging. The buyer assumes that there is the usual 12 pounds of bagging with the bale so the farmer with a bale in 10 pound wrapping contributes two pounds of lint cotton to make up the difference.

'Hard Money' Is Wanted In West

By GEORGE D. CRISSEY
United Press Staff Correspondent
SALT LAKE CITY, Utah.—With the circulation of gold coin forbidden, and silver frowned upon, the Far West is in the midst of a battle for retention of at least a part of its "hard money."

Old-timers, who once lovingly fondled gold coins, are reconciled to the disappearance of the yellow metal. They didn't mind, much. Paper money, in the larger denominations, wasn't so bad. But here lately paper one dollar bills have been creeping west, and no true westerner, particularly of the "hard money school," will stand for "those damn things."

There are, for example, in the 11 western states, hundreds of men who will tear up a paper dollar on sight. R. G. Stitser, editor and publisher of the Winnemucca (Nevada) Star, is one. "Stits" loves to rip up the other fellow's dollar bill and replace it with the honest silver "cartwheel."

And then down in Fallon, Nev., there dwells towering Andy Drumm Jr. Like the Winnemucca publisher, he is a huge man and finds the destruction of paper dollars a pleasant pursuit.

"The prohibition of the circulation of paper dollar bills is the only prohibition in which I believe," Stitser has announced a thousand times.

The result of this feeling as exemplified by Stitser and Drumm is that silver dollars still flow through the West—and the West, from the Mississippi to the Pacific, is crying for more.

Typical of western feeling is the comment of A. E. Cahoon, a native of Nevada, editor of the Las Vegas (Nevada) Review-Journal, after a visit to Washington:

"Personally, I like my silver dollars. Guess I'm fussy that way, but they are real money to me."

So the West, in addition to insisting that silver be a basic money metal also demands that it be circulated because, in the words of Cahoon:

"Those silver dollars carry with
