'HITLERISM HAS INVADDED AMERICA' —EDITOR MOLEY

Editor Raymond Moley of the magazine Today has invaded the field of sensationalism. In the early days of the New Deal Administration Editor Moley was prominent in the brain trust. He was very much in the picture and in the press for months and months. Then Vincent Astor launched the magazine Today. Well, Today has taken a new departure. Editor Moley has broadcast the news: "Existence of a fully organized, nationwide organization in the United States to establish the principles of German Hitlerism in this country and to replace democratic principles of popular government, will be disclosed in an elaborately documented series of articles, the first installment of which was published Friday. One Samuel Duff McCoy, "newspaper man whose sensational expose for the New York World in 1923 brought about reform of the Florida prison camp system," is the author of the first of the "elaborately documented series of articles."

There are tons of bunk unloaded on the American public. Included in the list of the bunkers and sensational writers of political fiction will be found the name of the Gary school master who is responsible for the Kerensky tale of the coming of Soviet Russia revolution under American skies.

Americans are not fools. They are not children. They are very patient, they are very self-sacrificing and they know the difference between a government of the people made by the people and a government of serfs made by the Stalins and Mussolinis and Hitlers of the foreign world. This republic will remain a nation of free people. They will continue to do their own thinking, their own voting, their own selecting of their public servants and their own experimenting in the wide world field of economic research. In the not remote past the old order was overthrown at the ballot box. Patriotic men and women of America planted their ballots where they would do the most good "for all of the people and not a few of the people." If "Hitlerism has invaded America," then Hitlerism or communism will be stamped out by the many millions of Americans (native and adopted) who believe that the many should rule wisely and that the few should bow to the wisdom of the majority as expressed at the ballot box.

Some cities have been death some hard knocks, but it may be said that a progressive city has never been downed for long.

There are two sides of human nature—optimistic and pessimistic. There should be only optimists in your home city.

It is a long lane that has no turning. Continuous advertising in this newspaper will help any merchant through the depression.

The ROMANTIC RUNAWAY

BEHIN HERE TODAY PABITO, a handsome youth, happened to be passing by the Key West to Havana with BEAC and LOTTIE, two thieves. Pabito has been accused of murder he did not commit. MARIE TREADWAY, socially prominent, could prove he is innocent but fears scandal. Pabito is in love with ESTELLE FIELD, daughter of rich JIM FIELD. In Havana, under Avn Corp Del, "Justice" is being celebrated as a boxer and he and SIR AUBREY, a cynicism, and Pabito's father, is scribbling for his own smugling Billings. New York detective. Three years pass and then Pabito sees Estelle again. They admit their love for each other and secretly marry. Estelle's father hears of it. He tells her she must break off with Pabito or he will turn the old murder charge against her. Meanwhile Billings, convinced Pabito is Sir Aubrey's son and innocent of the charge against him, sets to work to prove this. He develops the fact that his daughter is on a yacht cruise. NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XXXVI ESTELLE heartily disliked Alec Davids when she first met him—a lank, attenuated young man with baby muscles and a constant craving for cocktails. After a week on the yacht, however, she let him talk to her without showing her aversion and he was encouraged. Sitting beside her in a deck chair, he had his own thoughts in bitterness equalled hers. "You think I'm mad about you," Alec reflected as the girl turned away her face. "Well, I'm not. I wouldn't look at you if I could get out of it." The reason he couldn't get out of it was because of the state of the Davids' finances. Alec quite agreed with his mother that it was necessary for him to marry a rich wife. "After that," Mrs. Davids had gone on to point out, "you can go your own way." Alec had nodded complacently. He fully intended that. He knew Field liked him and wanted him to marry Estelle. And he knew the reason. Estelle would, by means of this marriage, reach the inner circle of society, the shabby outer fringe of which Field had only once touched. Alec Davids could trace his ancestry to aristocratic forebears. The fact that the family had disintegrated sharply was unimportant. Alec's mother had been willing to accept considerable benefits from those of her acquaintances who wished to reach a higher rung of the social ladder, while she sneered at them. Both Alec and his mother took pride in and gave nothing in return except a smile that was seared with patronizing scorn. EVEN now Alec sometimes borrowed from Field. "Might as well get the old rotter in the habit of coming across," he decided. He was amused by Field's too lavish display of his wealth. The older man, seeing and sensing the sneer, was more than ever certain that Alec was the man for his daughter. "He's the real stuff," Jim Field said to Marcia one afternoon. "His mother is the worst snob in New York," Marcia answered and her usual drawl was threatened by a rise of heat. "She snubbed me, too," Field said quickly. Marcia laughed, admitting that the thrust had hit a vulnerable point. "She won't snub me now," Field went on. "She wants this marriage just as much as I do." As he spoke he nodded toward the two deck chairs which were close together, held Estelle and Alec Davids. "Alec told me his aunt had promised to lend him her palace near Rome for his honeymoon. "The one who married that disgusting count?" "Yes." "The place is gorgeous. I've seen it." "One of the largest in Italy," said Field who had a great respect for size. Alec was talking to Estelle about poetry. She liked it, he had discovered, and he had culled all that he could from the library aboard. Estelle, believing he really was of the verses he quoted, looked at him with the first showing of interest. She had not thought that he would care for Houseman. She must have been quite unjust to him. "That is one of my favorites," she said, after his voice had died away. "I don't quite want to believe it but it does suit a mood that comes now and then." ALEC nodded and went on speaking. He talked well and pleasingly when he cared to. He had been reared by his mother and sundry tutors in France and England and the inarticulateness general in collegiate circles was not his. "Our tastes must be the same," he said with a suddenly flaring ardor that seemed genuine. "They must be or I could not feel—as I do." She made no answer. She had turned her face away again. "You pallid little bourgeoisie!" he thought. "Do you honestly think I'm enjoying this?" "I'll try not to annoy you again, Estelle," he promised, "but it's difficult to keep silent, feeling as I do. I've never cared for anyone like this before. It's—well, it isn't easy! But that's selfish of me. All I want is for you to be perfectly happy—and that and to be near you some times. You don't mind my saying this, do you?" He waited, leaning across the arm of the chair toward her. She turned her head and he was surprised, but not touched, by seeing tears in her eyes. He said a quick, apparently distressed, "What is it, dear?" She told him she was very unhappy and that she was lonely. He, too, had been lonely, he confessed, always he had been lonely until he had met her. Privately he was thinking, "So it's going to be as easy as this!" Then he stifled what would have been a yawn and felt his jaws ache from the effort. Lord, he was dead for sleep! But he had to go on with this farce. "You haven't told me whether my being near you annoys you, Estelle. I really want to know. I want to know terribly—" "Oh, it doesn't annoy me," she answered. "Nothing seems to annoy me lately. But I don't want you to hope that I will change my mind about you, for I can't. I'm never going to marry." "If I believed that I'd make a lovely splash in the sea out there!" she heard. She said almost petulantly, "Oh please don't talk like that." And again she turned away her face. THE yellowed calendar leaf above Pabito's desk read, "June." He tore the leaf off. Already it was the fifteenth of July and, for all he knew, he might have become a year older. He had no way to count the years since he had no certainty of his birthday. He had been sitting at his desk writing to the man he had come to know as Sir Aubrey. They had written several letters to each other. Now, his letter sealed in its envelope, the old tangle was plaguing him again. If he were to escape, he would have to pull Beau and Lottie into it. In their way they were his friends. He had for them both a genuine affection that had persisted in spite of many trials. Then, too, if he were willing to sacrifice them who would believe him? The evidence was clearly against him. Besides, he could not do this to Beau and Lottie—even for Estelle. He wondered where she might be now. He had had no word from her. Each night he dreamed that the next day might bring him some message, but each day held nothing beyond the usual routine. Gossp told him the Field yacht had touched many shores and now was under steam in the Mediterranean. He thought of Estelle looking on fringes of palms, low pink and blue houses, or a misty line of far, blue mountains. But thinking of her was not enough. He was more the man and his hunger had grown with his capacity for suffering. One thing he was spared and that was any doubt of her. He did not so much as question the fact that she would wait for him, just as he would wait, until they could be together. The clubs were empty of tourists who enjoyed a good boxing match and no one came to the gymnasium during the summer. There was nothing to do—nothing but to wander down to the harbor entrance to hear the band play or motor into the country. At neither of these pastimes could he escape his thoughts. With the idea that a change might do him good he took a trip to Camaguey and on to Santiago but the ache only increased. He thought so frequently, "Estelle would like this." Twice he had visions of her that seemed so real they made him catch his breath on a sob as they faded. He dreamed of her continually and thus waking became agony. He would dream that she was in his arms and then, awakening, find them empty. He grew thin. His face was haggard and his eyes shadowed. "Honest, you hardly eat anything, dearie," Lottie complained at every meal. (To Be Continued)
